Candidate list grows

Mader, Scarbrough declare bid for president, vice president

"I would like to see the faculty salary issue resolved. We want to make sure the state realizes its responsibility for education and doesn't make the students the easy way out."

CANDIDATE FOR STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT

RHONDA WILSON

Add two more names to the Student Governing Association presidential ballot.

Tracy Mader, junior in agricultural economics, and Marc Scarbrough, senior in electronic engineering and pre-medicine, became the second team to announce their candidacy for student body president and vice president Tuesday afternoon.

Mader, a two-term senator for the College of Agriculture, and Scarbrough, a two-term senator for the College of Engineering, said they are committed to supporting programs designed to help students.

"Students are the essence," Mader said.

The candidates said they would like to see the executive branch of student government facilitate direct communication with the students.

"I would like to really make the executive branch more efficient in serving the students," Scarbrough said.

Mader and Scarbrough said they believe part of serving the students involves trying to put a cap on the cost-fee ratio. This cap would not allow the state to increase tuition just to pay for raises in faculty salaries.

"I would like to see the faculty salary issue resolved," Mader said. "We want to make sure the state realizes its responsibility for education and doesn't make the students an easy way out."

This would involve continuing good relations with administration at the state level, he said.

VINCENT P. LAVERGNE/Collegian

Tracy Mader, junior in agricultural economics, (left) and Marc Scarbrough, senior in pre-medicine and electrical engineering, announce their candidacy for student body president and vice-president, respectively, during a press conference Tuesday afternoon in Waters Hall. Elections will be April 13 and 14.

"What makes K-State unique is when administration and students work together," Mader said.

He also said student input to the Kansas Board of Regents is important, especially concerning per-credit-hour fees and qualified admission.

Another idea from the candidates is to see the University develop a program to enhance a student's interpersonal skills.

"Students go to college for two reasons — to get an education and to eventually get a job," Scarbrough said.

Employers are finding that students may be technically capable, he said. But they are sometimes lacking in interpersonal skills that are vital in the job market.

Mader and Scarbrough said they would like to see the possibility of a co-curricular transcript available on campus.

This type of transcript would allow a university to document students' professional skills as well as their interpersonal skills. Employers would be able to see communication skills, leadership skills and other interpersonal skills of the student alongside technical skills.

Some smaller universities are using this type of transcript, and 72 percent of the employers who have seen this type of documentation find it helpful, Scarbrough said.

Both candidates said they realize one term in office is not enough time for all of their ideas to be enacted.

"We have to start small and get the ball rolling," Mader said. "Our ideas might not be the glitz and glamour, but hopefully they will be seeds for something big in the future."

City commission race narrowed in primary

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Ruth Mahin, right, and Ann Forslund, left, wait for voters to cast their choices in the primary election for Manhattan City Commissioners Tuesday afternoon in Bluemont School. As of about 1 p.m., 29 of about 500 registered voters in the Bluemont School precinct had voted. Citywide, 15 percent of those registered in Riley County cast their ballots.

Top six candidates advance to April 6 general election

COLLEGIAN STAFF

The city commission field has been narrowed to six after Tuesday's primary election.

There were few surprises as incumbents Edith Stunkel and Gene Klingler were among the top-three vote getters.

The election attracted only 15 percent of the 22,500 registered voters in Riley County.

"I was very disappointed in the voter turnout," Riley County Election Officer Ilene Colbert said.

"In light of the weather, that was probably the cause of the small turnout."

Sydney Carlin, who finished in second place, said he felt a possible cause for the low voter participation was the lack of publicity.

"We did a small informal poll on Sunday, and most of the people we talked to did not even know there was an election on Tuesday," Carlin said. "There was not much publicity about this election, and I'm sure the general election will be better publicized, and the turnout will be higher."

The top-six vote getters from the primary will advance to the April 6 general election. Voters will then select three candidates to serve on the city commission.

COUNCIL GROVE

Innocent plea entered on behalf of defendant

DEBORAH WHITSON

Collegian

A plea of not guilty was entered Tuesday on behalf of the man charged with killing a K-State student in Council Grove Jan. 23.

Judge Michael Powers entered the plea on behalf of Scotty R. Adam, 18, of Council Grove.

Adam is charged with either premeditated first-degree murder, or felony first-degree murder and aggravated robbery in the Jan. 23 stabbing death of Scott O. Sanders, freshman in mechanical engineering. Adam refused to speak at the arraignment.

At Morris County District Court in Council Grove, Adam's defense attorney, Ralph DeSago, waived formal reading of charges and chose not to enter a plea.

"It's a procedural tactic sometimes used," Robert Daub, Morris County attorney, said. "I can't speculate as to why he did it."

A three-day trial has been set for May 18 in Morris County.

Daub said the defense filed a motion for disclosure, which is a standard procedure in most arraignments.

"We filed a motion of intent to seek a hard 40," he said. "This would mean a mandatory sentence of 40 years without parole."

A hard 40 can only be instituted if the defendant is found guilty of premeditated first-degree murder.

"We feel the preliminary hearing went very well," Daub said. "We think we have a good case."

In the Feb. 17 preliminary hearing, the prosecution presented sufficient evidence to have Adam's bond raised to $200,000. Bond has not been posted, and Adam remains in jail at this time.

"I have no reason to believe he will be out before the trial," Daub said.

Events planned to share culture

Pow wows, speakers and colorful ceremonial attire will accent the month of March as Native American Heritage Month.

Marcial Riquelme, associate professor of sociology and director of Latin American studies, said there is a need for the events.

"We live in a very racist society, with a considerable amount of racism and prejudice. There is a great deal that you can detect in everyday interactions."

"In the Sixties and Seventies there was rapid progress in race relations. In the last 12 years or so there was a period of regression as far as advances for minorities. Every day we see the importance and relevance of inter-ethnic relations and how deteriorated it is," he said.

Riquelme said the events planned for this month will help by sharing information about different cultures.

"We look at North American, as well as Central and South American native cultures," he said.

Thurman Williams is the co-chair of the Native American Student Body.

"It is a celebration of culture. It is to educate the campus on Native American Cultures, from both North and South America," Williams said.

Several tribes will participate in the pow wow. There will be snake, buffalo, grass and squash dances, Williams said.

ON THE AGENDA

Congress battles plan

RANCE AMES
Collegian

WASHINGTON — The first congressional battle over President Clinton's economic plan erupted in the Senate on Tuesday as Republicans accused Democrats of enlarging the deficit with a $5.7 billion unemployment benefits bill.

GOP lawmakers offered an amendment that would pay the bill's costs with across-the-board spending cuts in the federal government's administrative expenses.

They argued that Congress has to start taking a pay-as-you-go approach, or it will never control the national debt.

A vote on the Republican amendment was set for Wednesday. The Senate hoped to take a vote on the bill as well.

By adding to the deficit with the first spending bill of the year, "we will have started down a trail of not paying things," Rep. Bob Packwood, R-Ore, said.

The Republican plan is the only way lawmakers can prove they're serious about deficit reduction, Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, said.

"There has been a great gulf between our words and our deeds," Gramm said.

"We have an opportunity with this amendment ... to change all that. I hope we will not prove that our words are phony once again."

But Democrats, who want to pass the bill before extended jobless benefits expire Saturday, argued that Congress can't start toying with individual pieces of Clinton's economic plan.

City adopts BOCA rental property codes

Unanimous vote passes proposal; work session proposed for landlords, staff

WADE SISSON
Collegian

The Manhattan City Commission unanimously adopted the Building Officials and Code Administrators (BOCA) National Property Maintenance Code Tuesday afternoon.

The BOCA code establishes mandatory standards that rental property owners must meet.

The code proposal, which was presented at the commission meeting Dec. 15, was postponed until city staff could meet with the Landlord's Association of Manhattan to discuss changes.

The amended proposal passed by a vote of 5-0.

"In the past few years, I've seen students repeatedly express concerns about the safety and quality of rental properties," Jackie McClaskey, student body president, said.

"On behalf of the students, we hope you adopt this as it appears in the 1990 BOCA codes," she said.

Student Senate Resolution 92-93-46, which urged the commission to pass the code, was also presented at the meeting.

"A majority of our cases are students coming in with landlord-tenant disputes," said Dirk Shrimplin, Student Governing Association Consumer Relations Board intern.

The BOCA code is usually amended every three years. Manhattan had been following the 1987 version of the code until the commission passed the 1990 version Tuesday afternoon.

The 1993 version might be available this spring.

Commissioner Edith Stunkel asked if the matter could not be put on hold until the new version is released.

"I'm wondering, should we just wait for that one?" she said. "Is this a tempest in a teapot?"

Those at the meeting debated the letter of the proposed code and how it may be interpreted differently.

Richard Hill, who said he was speaking on behalf of the Landlord's Association of Manhattan, presented several passages in the proposed code that could possibly be misinterpreted.

One of the passages involved the lighting of halls and stairways. "As it stands now, it requires that all inside and outside hallways and stairwells must be lit at all times by at least 60 watts," he said. "We feel if there's adequate light, there's no need to run light bulbs."

The commission acknowledged the passage could be misinterpreted and amended it so that light bulbs need not be in use when sunlight was equivalent to a 60-watt bulb.

"One person's interpretation may differ from the other, and inspectors come and go," Hill said. City Attorney William Frost noted the problem of misinterpretation.

"Any time you try to put a finite definition in there, it's very difficult to have flexibility," he said.

John Conderman, a Manhattan attorney, said the city staff should not involve itself with the negotiations between landlords and tenants once a lease is signed.

"The concern is really that we think the city should be neutral in this," he said. "We think the concern should be to keep the city in a neutral position."

Phil Anderson, a local property owner and K-State instructor of speech, said he thought the neutrality idea was acceptable after the tenant has been assured of his or her safety.

Larry Plumlee, member of the landlord association, said, "We have a major problem in this city, and that being we have a huge housing industry here, and housing needs to be upgraded."

He suggested the city staff and the landlord association attend a work session to discuss the code proposal.

Mayor Richard Seidler said he would support such a session.

"It was our hope that when we asked city staff to sit down with you that we could share mutual concerns," Seidler said.

Stan Hoerman, a member of the landlord association, said, "I think we need to look at the big picture of this. If the apartments are unsafe, as has been said, how can the landlords get adequate liability insurance?"

"The biggest unsafe part of the apartments are the tenants themselves," he said.

Mayor Seidler adjourned the meeting at 5:30 p.m.

"It's a given that there are horrible landlords," he said. "It's a given that there are horrible tenants. It's a given that there are good landlords, and it's a given that there are good tenants. We're not here to decide which is which."

Stroh awarded Kansas art fellowship

LAURA HEIDE
Collegian

Charles Stroh, professor of art, was one of three visual artists awarded the 1993 Kansas Artist Fellowship by the Kansas Arts Commission on February 19 in Wichita.

Stroh was one of 60 Kansas artists who applied in one of three categories: two-dimensional art, three-dimensional art, and crafts. Stroh was awarded the fellowship for two-dimensional art.

The fellowship is a $5,000 reward that will be used to advance a new body of work, Stroh said.

"I plan to incorporate different art processes and techniques such as painting, sculpture and construction into one piece of art work."

Stroh said in his artist statement presented to KAC, "My concerns as a painter are with the relationship between surface and the illusive properties of marks on the surface. At the same time, I am exploring the relationship between 'inside' and 'outside' ... a metaphorical inside (feelings, expression, self) and a literal outside (the perceptual world). My paintings include landscape imagery with painted borders/frames and written texts."

Stroh was recommended for the award.

The Visual Arts Fellowship Advisory Panels, each made up of six professionals in the visual arts, reviewed the applications and recommended candidates for the fellowship awards, Bob Burch, public information coordinator for KAC, said.

The panels considered the quality of each artist's work, information included in the artist's statement, and record of professional activity and achievement.

Stroh's work has been included in many combined juried, invitational, one-person and group exhibitions, publications and collections, Burch said. He also has received numerous awards, grants and fellowships, including a professional development grant from KAC.

He has been working as an artist for almost 25 years. Stroh was originally trained in lithography, a

THE ISSUE

An estimated 15 percent of eligible voters voted in Tuesday's primary election.

WE SUGGEST

Vote in the April 6 general election. Local political decisions can affect you more than national ones.

Where have all the voters gone?

Certainly not to the polls if the turnout for Tuesday's primary election is any indication. Riley County Election Officer Ilene Colbert estimated that only 15 percent of eligible voters took the time to vote.

True, the election Tuesday was only a primary to decide which six of eight Manhattan City Commission candidates would advance to the April 6 general election. It lacked the excitement of the last presidential election, in which record numbers of voters turned out nationwide.

But a look at the issues facing the city of Manhattan tells you how important this primary election was.

The future city commission will tackle such issues of student concern as a mandatory rental inspection program, a citywide mass transit system and perhaps the future annexation of K-State.

Somehow, to let about one in seven voters decide what direction the city commission will take in deciding those issues seems like a tragic waste of the spirit and energy of the young.

Simply put, that means only a few residents of Manhattan are deciding what our future is going to be.

READERS WRITE

CAREERS

Article on career futures lacked accuracy

Editor,

I write to express a concern about the article, "Job statistics deceiving to grads," in the Feb. 15 Collegian. We appreciate Lynn Anderson's interest in job search areas but regret some misrepresentation in the article.

As in the past, better and more applicable information can be made available when the reporter identifies herself or himself, provides parameters for the type of story desired and requests the needed information. We are very interested in making such information available so our University community is well informed relative to various aspects of the job search.

While our center is most fortunate to have some outstanding student employees, it is hardly advisable to seek out such a student, especially one who works largely with part-time employment, as the primary source for a career employment article. Had Anderson stated her purpose, she would have been referred to a staff member who is more familiar with the career type of job searches.

Anyone who recently has been or currently is in the job market will not dispute the fact that the market is quite competitive. Fortunately, this University has an excellent reputation for quality programs, excellent faculty and outstanding graduates. Largely because of this quality, excellent job-search support and personal hard work, recent graduates have continued to do well in the job market.

It is far too early to judge the Department of Labor's growth projections through the year 2005. It is not inconsistent with current fluctuations in the job market.

We do appreciate being mentioned as the type of service "applauded in U.S. News and World Report 1993 Career Guide." If Lynn Anderson would like to follow up with a more nearly accurate story, I am certain that we can assist her.

PUNISHMENT

Unborn constantly put on death row

Editor,

In her article, "An eye for an eye for an eye..." in the Feb. 17 Collegian, Kelly Klawonn said, "Each and every one of us should have the right to live if we choose. And yes, we should have the right to die as well." If this is true, who is protecting the rights of the unborn to live? Certainly unborn children have the same right to life as any other member of society, according to Klawonn's logic.

Women and feminist groups in this country argue that they are denied access to power, privilege and their civil rights, and in some cases they are. However, these same groups seek to deny other silent minorities, namely unborn children, the same access to freedom of choice they seek for themselves.

If we are truly a nation founded on the right to choose to live or die, then it is time for us to give all minorities those rights, including the unborn.

Joel Miller
Senior/Business administration

Loss of freedom should be enough

Editor,

At last, a serious and interesting issue was opened in John Hawks' "Capital! Punishment." column in the Feb. 22 Collegian. However, I have found his column lacking depth and coherency.

Moral codes were not brought about by governments; they were largely part of religious or other ideology systems. Parts of these rules were written down and enforced as laws. Only there, the need for a government as a source of law enforcement arose.

Of course, it is not possible to transfer all morality into functional laws. Misbehavior against morality cannot often be defined with needed exactness.

Reverse application of Hawks' reasoning "... this society had no need of a government or of laws. Therefore, there was no crime," leads to the surprising: "The society has the need of capital punishment. Therefore, there is murder." Yes, severe punishment for a crime can be sensed as a socially approved crime by itself, no matter that it was committed on behalf of the community.

Contemporary omnipresence of crime, however, maintains the need of protection of the individual against another individual. Nevertheless, authorization of the state to use power against an individual should be painstakingly controlled.

Finally, a long-term incarceration is not a separation from the punishment. Being deprived freedom is the punishment itself.

And don't tell me, Hawks, that prisons are such sweet places to live. I will not believe you until I see crowds pounding at the jail gates to get in.

RESPONSE

"Outing" defeats the purpose of gay groups

Editor,

I am a little confused. I had been given the impression that the motivating factor behind the gay rights movement was the desire of homosexuals to live their lives the way they want.

Kelly Klawonn's Feb. 24 column titled "The Fine Art of Outing" has exposed our University community to one of the most blatant double standards of any movement in society today. Two of the most visible homosexual activist groups, ACT-UP and Queer Nation, have taken it upon themselves to ignore the right to privacy of public figures and expose their supposedly homosexual lifestyles. That makes me question what the real motive of these groups is. It is certainly not to increase the freedom of members of the homosexual community, because part of freedom is having a private life if one chooses.

I also question the value of involuntary "outings." Do people join in the fight with a group that has just exposed part of their private life that was intended to stay private? I suggest to other factions of the voluntarily public homosexual community, which desire acceptance by society, that militant groups that participate in underhanded activities like "outings" be discouraged and shunned, as a symbol of the true intentions of the gay rights movement, unless there is more to the movement than they want society to realize.

FEES

Diversions smite more mightily than haleness

Editor,

This is in response to the column written by Ed Skoog on Feb. 22.

You presented a solution to a problem that is plaguing many minds on this campus. They are uncertain. Flummox means uncertain. They are on shaky ground. Quagmire means quaking surface. They are uneasy about events that have happened. Malaise means uneasy. They are working to better involve students with K-State athletic events. You feel that by offering free tickets to students, the problem will fix itself. That is like giving someone a gun to cure a headache.

Since I pay a fee to Student Publications Inc., why don't I get my Royal Purple free? Since I pay my Lafene Health Center fee every semester, why must I still pay for immunizations and medicine?

Why don't I get these things for free after I've already paid for their services? Because it is not feasible for these two facilities to offer these services for free.

These fees help to cover the operating costs of the facilities. They help pay for the equipment and services they offer.

One fee that I would double in a heartbeat is the fee to K-State athletics.

K-State athletics probably supplies a greater service to more people than the services of the two above organizations combined. It reaches farther than just campus and the surrounding Manhattan area. It even goes beyond the Kansas state line.

There are many ways to help this institution. Many active roles to play. Don't sit back and criticize the situation, but do something to help it.

I don't have the heart to tell Anthony Beane and the rest of the basketball team that their services are not appreciated. They offer the service, in a world grown flummox, that the tradition of K-State athletics will always live forever in every true Wildcat fan.

MOVIE

Profanity no reason to pan brilliant film

Editor,

I have never been so misled by a movie review that I was by Christina Carbajal's review of "Glengarry Glen Ross." David Mamet's devastating depiction of the frenetic monotony that fills the lives of salesmen and Carbajal's prissy, no-profanity-please provincialism apparently passed each other like ships in broad daylight.

Frankly, I'd rather read a review written by David-Michael Allen, who thinks he knows everything, than another by Carbajal, who doesn't know $@%&!

PUTTING THE WORLD ON TRIAL

KELLY KLAWONN

Normally, I try to avoid the pedantic art of quoting court cases outside of a law class or courtroom. But there are some times when we must abandon the norm for the sake of argument. This is such a case.

In Prince v. Massachusetts, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that parents could not, because of their religious beliefs, prevent their children from receiving proper medical treatment.

At the center of this debate is generally the Christian Scientist. People of this religion hold the belief that God will protect their children, and God will determine whether or not children can or should survive illnesses. The survival of Christian Scientists and the curing of their ails is accomplished through prayer and meditation, both alone and with a spiritual healer.

Christian Scientist parents have been prosecuted for manslaughter and criminal medical negligence for their failure to bring medically treatable diseases or conditions to the attention of a licensed medical worker.

The courts have continually supported the theory of parens patriae, which establishes the right of the state to intervene on behalf of children, when their lives or welfare are threatened by the acts of their parents.

Parents are free to do as they please with their own lives and bodies, but not with the lives and bodies of their children. Or, as the Supreme Court stated in the Massachusetts decision: "Parents are free to become martyrs themselves. But it does not follow they are free to make martyrs of their children."

Neither parents, nor any other governing bodies, should be endowed with the freedom to blindly lead their children into martyrdom.

It is high time we start holding our political and religious leaders, not just Christian Scientists, to the boundaries of the law.

In "Close to the Knives," David Wojnarowicz makes the argument that if information and education are considered preventive medicine, then the religious, political and media leaders of this country have been guilty of withholding information about AIDS and AIDS prevention on a consistent basis.

The blatant and intended withholding of vital information by these institutions and agents has ultimately caused the needless deaths of many citizens of this country. Deaths that could possibly have been avoided with proper preventive education about sex and safe sex. Deaths that they should be held accountable for.

But instead, the Reagan administration waited nearly eight years to distribute a few posters dealing with AIDS. During that time, teen-agers became the fastest growing group of AIDS patients. A number that continued to rise in the following years.

Instead of preventive information, we had the Roman Catholic Church telling us that "Morality is the only prevention for AIDS." This, completely ignoring the scientific research that shows latex condoms, when properly used, can greatly reduce the chance of getting or spreading the virus.

While the bodies are piling up, we have a media establishment relegating the AIDS epidemic to back-page news.

The churches, representatives and reporters of this country have an obligation to protect the citizens of this country.

This means giving us all the information. This doesn't mean giving us only the information they deem necessary. If the Catholic faith is so fragile that it can be altered by the influx of safe-sex literature, let that be the concern of the Pope, not of the masses.

People argue that the mandating of the distribution of safe-sex literature in private or religious schools flies in the face of separation of church and state.

But to allow churches and governing bodies to mislead and ignore verifiable scientific fact is the greatest injustice of all.

Working Into The Night

Daytime Studies Leave The Nights Open For Extra Cash

It's 3 a.m. Most K-State students can be found cramming for an exam or catching some sleep, while others can be found slaving away trying to earn some extra money.

Daren Walker, senior in biology and employee at Dara's Fast Lane, said he likes to work late.

"It really makes me feel good to know that while I'm working, I'm also getting an education. It means a lot more to me to know that I'm putting my myself through school instead of making my parents pay for it," he said.

Walker works from midnight until 8 a.m. three times a week.

"In the beginning, it was pretty hard to adjust to the schedule, but I've gotten used to it," he said.

Cliff Conner, sophomore in business and employee at Shop Quik, said he also likes to work late.

"I like it a lot. There's no one around to tell me what to do, and business doesn't get too bad, except on weekends," he said.

Conner works from 11 p.m. until 7 a.m. three to four times a week.

"I'm a night person anyway. It works better for me because I can study, go to sleep and then get up and study again," he said.

Conner said he also needs the money.

"The way I spend money, I got to have a job," he said.

Dave McConnell, senior in architecture and night stocker at Dillons, said he works late because he needs money as well.

"I needed the money, and they needed the help," he said. "It screws things up at first, but I've learned to sleep during the day," he said.

McConnell works from 10 p.m. until 6 a.m. four times a week.

"I wake up and feel like I don't want to get out of bed, but once I get to work, I'm all right," he said.

Debbie Miller, sophomore in sociology and waitress at Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon, said working until 3 a.m. has some effects on the body.

"It really wears you down. When I wake up in the morning to go to class, I turn my snooze on three times and try to think up 20 excuses not to get out of bed," she said.

Even though Miller said she feels tired a lot, she keeps up with her studies.

"I've been getting pretty good grades so far, and I don't want to let them go. I also want to prove to myself that I can get good grades and earn a lot of money at the same time," she said.

Miller said she is putting her money toward a trip to Europe next year.

Aaron Bohrer, junior in geography and front-desk receptionist at Marlatt Hall, said some days are harder for him to go to class after getting off work at 6 a.m.

"It's pretty easy to make it to class if I don't try to go back to sleep. Before, I tried to sleep a few hours and then go to class, but I found that it was too hard to wake up once I had already been asleep," he said.

▲ As closing time nears, Miller tends to her normal chores of cleaning up. She worked from nine until two the next morning.

◀ Aaron Bohrer, junior in geography, does homework while working a three-hour shift at the Marlatt Hall front desk. He works 10 hours a week, which includes a late shift from three to six Wednesday mornings.

Cats keep dream alive with 78-67 win over MU

The Wildcats moved a step closer to the NCAA Tournament Tuesday night with a 78-67 win over Missouri at Bramlage Coliseum.

"I think we deserve to be in the tournament now," K-State coach Dana Altman said. "I think this conference is strong, and I think we deserve to be in."

"I thought seven games was what we needed."

The victory gives the Cats a 17-8 overall record and, more importantly, a 7-6 Big Eight mark.

"Sure, they are going to get in," said Tiger coach Norm Stewart, whose club fell to 15-13 and 4-9. "If you look at the league, six teams will get in. This is a solid little ball club. I think they will get in."

The Wildcats took advantage of Missouri's sluggish first half, when the Tigers made just nine of 25 shots. In fact, 10 minutes into the first half, Missouri had eight turnovers and just seven points.

But the Cats weren't lighting it up early, either. Nearly 11 minutes into that opening period, K-State was leading by just a 15-9 score.

But the Wildcat defense went on to hold the Tigers to 20 first-half points — tying a Bramlage record for fewest points in a half by a Big Eight team.

"I thought we played pretty good," Altman said. "That's the best we've played in a long time."

Five minutes into the second half, the Tigers clawed back into the game. They went on an 11-2 run that cut the Wildcats' lead — that had gotten as high as 20 points — to 10.

But after Mark Atkins' two free throws made the score 49-38, Stewart was called for a technical foul. He argued that center Deryl Cunningham should have been called for a foul on a play in which K-State was given the ball.

"Damn guy knocks him out of bounds, and you give him the ball back?" Stewart shouted at a referee. "That's embarrassing to the Big Eight."

The rest of the way, K-State won the game at the free-throw line. After Stewart's technical, 21 of the Cats' final 26 points were scored from the charity stripe. In fact, K-State didn't attempt a single field goal in the final three minutes of the game but still scored 19 points.

"It was real important to knock those down," Altman said. "Those last few minutes lasted a long time."

The game marked the Bramlage finale for seniors Aaron Collier and Vincent Jackson, who were both honored at halftime.

Jackson finished with 17 points, despite picking up his third foul with six minutes to play in the first half.

"I feel relieved that we got the seventh win," Jackson said. "But I want to get another Big Eight win. That will put some more spice in my career."

And Collier said he was happy despite scoring just two points.

"If the scoring would have come, I would have taken it," he said. "But I was just looking to play solid."

"We were all pumped up because we knew we had to win this game. We felt we worked too hard to let it end."

The win was a chance for K-State to avenge a 67-51 loss at Mizzou on Feb. 8 that was televised nationally.

That game was the last time Missouri posted a victory. The Tigers' current losing streak has reached seven games — their longest conference slump since the 1973-74 season.

"It was payback for everybody," Anthony Beane said. "They really kicked us on ESPN."

Askia Jones led the Cats with 22 points. But he was just one of four players that reached double-digit scoring for K-State, including 12 from Brian Henson and 14 from Beane.

Perhaps the game was best exemplified for Stewart, who was disgruntled with the officiating all night, with 6.6 seconds remaining when the crowd began chanting NIT — the initials of the postseason tournament his squad might be going instead of the NCAA.

"Who were they yelling NIT for?" Stewart asked the media after the game. "I was looking around. There probably isn't but one team going anywhere, and I figured they wouldn't be yelling NIT for themselves."

SPORTS DIGEST

►CHIEFS' THOMAS A FREE AGENT

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Kansas City All-Pro linebacker Derrick Thomas is a restricted free agent because of a clause in his contract that voids the last year of the five-year deal he signed in 1989.

The Chiefs agreed to renegotiate the contract if Thomas made the Pro Bowl in each of his four years.

"I sat down with Derrick and told him that if he went to four consecutive Pro Bowls, I would do a new contract with him," Chiefs president Carl Peterson said.

The Chiefs have made a qualifying offer of $900,000 to Thomas.

Thomas is free to negotiate with any team, but the Chiefs have the right to match any offer he might receive. If the Chiefs do not match the offer, the team that signs Thomas would have to give up a first- and a third-round draft choice to Kansas City.

Askia Jones, Wildcat guard, battles Missouri's Mario Finner for a loose ball Tuesday night while K-State guard Brian Henson tries to get a hand in the action. Jones made 13 of his 17 free throws, both Bramlage highs.

K-State hits 36 of 47 free throws

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Coaches say games are won or lost from the free-throw line.

Coach Dana Altman and his team would agree.

K-State hit 36 of 47 free throws — including 19 out of 22 shots in the final three minutes of the game — to help the Cats hold off Missouri, 78-67.

"They gave us a bunch there at the end, and it was real important to knock those down," Altman said. "Everybody went up to the line and got one or two shots. We are fortunate to get those free throws."

K-State's 36 successful free throws established a new Bramlage Coliseum record. The old mark was 32 against Oklahoma on Feb. 2, 1989.

"They were tightening the lead, and we knew we had to knock them down," Askia Jones said. "We needed every free throw."

Jones did his part, making 13 of 17 from the charity stripe. His 13 successful freebies tied the Bramlage mark, and the 17 attempts surpassed the Bramlage record of 15.

Also, Jones ties a group of five former Wildcats who made 13 free throws against a Big Eight team. The last Cat to make more than 13 free throws was Steve Henson, who had 17 against Iowa State on Feb. 24, 1988.

"I expect to make all of them when I go to the line," Jones said. "There is no defense on me, so, I should make those shots. I try to go up there with a positive attitude."

With the game nearing the end, Jones said he knew Missouri would start to foul.

"They didn't want to waste too much time," he said. "So, they fouled the first person who had the ball."

Once again, Anthony Beane made a difference at the end of a game. He made five of six free throws in the final three minutes.

"They were very important shots," Beane said, who made seven of eight on the game. "We knew we had to step up and make them. If we wouldn't hit the free throws, they would have been hyped up and excited."

"We went to the line, and they fell in," Beane said. "If the first person hits his shots, the next one will have confidence to hit his shots."

Beane has made 75 percent of his free throws in conference play.

Vincent Jackson contributed to the effort in his last game in Bramlage by hitting nine of 10 at the line.

In his last three games, Jackson has made 14 of his 16 free throws — an 88-percent clip — and is averaging 17.3 points.

"They had to stop the clock and hope we missed our free throws and try to get back into the game," Jackson said. "We knocked them down."

Before the game, K-State was hitting 65 percent from the line.

"We haven't been successful all year until tonight," Beane said.

Low turnout blamed on apathy, lack of widespread publicity judge Ruth Burk expected that the number of voters for this primary would only be about 200.

"I think that there was not much publicity for this election, plus the fact that college students are not interested in a local election," Burk said.

K-State students make up a large percentage of the voting population in Manhattan but don't get involved as much in city issues as they do in campus issues, some students said.

"I'm from out-of-town, and I don't get involved with the city much," John Scott, sophomore in mechanical engineering, said.

But voters like Linda Lucas, Manhattan, stressed that each election is important and counts no matter how small the election is.

"This is our city, and these are our people we want to get in," Lucas said.

Others said the election's publicity was not widespread enough.

"I had no idea there was an election today," Tracy Wacker, freshman in engineering, said.

Some K-State students and Manhattan residents said they didn't have as much knowledge of the local candidates as many of the older people in the community did.

Charles Hedinger, Manhattan, said he was fortunate to know one of the candidates.

"I've known (Eugene) Klingler for so long, and he's been really active. He's got his finger in, and he knows what's going on," Hedinger said. "I guessed on the others."

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

Cross-dresser fears complex

DEAR CASSANDRA,
I have this problem that I can't talk to anyone about. You see, I'm a man who likes to dress up as a woman. I have kept this a secret for a long time and even live by myself in a trailer so I can cross-dress in private.

However, recently one of my classmates was over, and I think he saw my pink tutu that I accidentally left out. He never said anything, but I'm afraid that if this news leaked out all my homophobic friends would think I was queer. I'm 6 feet 4 inches and weigh more than 200 pounds and try to maintain a macho image. People would never suspect that I had this secret life, and I'm afraid everyone in my class would make fun of me if they found out.

Sometimes I even think my dog is laughing at me when she sees me wearing my favorite lacy dress around the trailer. Cassandra, this really causing me to have a complex. Should I continue my secret obsession with ladies clothes, or should I seek counseling?

Feel Like an Ox

DEAR OX,
It sounds like your cross-dressing is really bothering you. I would recommend that you seek counseling.

However, if it's any consolation, I doubt that your dog is really laughing at you.

form of print making, which is the transfer of ink from a surface onto a piece of paper. Other forms of print making include wood cutting, etching and silk screen.

"Print making is extremely time consuming," he said.

"It takes a very long time to produce an image. The things that I was working on were better realized through paint than through print making."

For Stroh, each piece he accomplishes is an inspiration for the next.

"Everything is integrated with everything else in such a way that when you do one piece things come to mind, feelings come to the forefront and motivate you to get started on the next piece," he said.

Burtch said the funding for the fellowship was provided through an appropriation by the 1992 Kansas Legislature of Economic Development Initiative Funds, from state gaming revenues.

KAC is one of 55 art councils in the United States and its territories. Kansas ranks 51st in the allocation of funds. Dorothy Ilgen, executive director of KAC, said this is because of budget cuts.

"This does reflect to some degree the value that elected officials put on funding for the art commission," Ilgen said.

Stroh also has a theory on this.

"It is not a political priority for Kansas, which believes in the notion that some things belong in the private sector and not in the political sector," he said.

COMING EVENTS

Carmen
New York City Opera National Company
Friday, March 12, 8 p.m.*
An alluring gypsy heroine, a handsome bullfighter, and mysterious smugglers come to life in Bizet's powerful evocation of Spain. The National Company's new production is sung in French with English supertitles.
Tickets: $30-$11

Australian Chamber Orchestra
Daniel McKelway, clarinet soloist
Wednesday, March 17, 8 p.m.*
The award-winning who delighted McCain audiences with his 1991 all-Mozart program returns with an orchestra that has developed an outstanding reputation of its own. You'll hear works by Weber, Haydn, and Bartok.
Tickets: $18-$9

Chicago City Limits
Saturday, April 3, 8 p.m.
Strap yourself in! Improvisational skits performed by this group have caused irreparable damage to audiences across the country. These six actor-writer-comedians transform your ideas into hilarious sketches. Be ready to shout out your suggestions.
Tickets: $14-$7

Da Capo Chamber Players
Saturday, April 24, 8 p.m.*
An unusual combination of instruments—flute, clarinet, violin, cello and piano—and a distinctive repertoire have won the Da Capo high praise from Hoboken to Honolulu. The New Yorker notes that the Da Capo's performances "excite the imagination as well as the admiration."
Tickets: $12-$6

College Students
Best Payback.
Spend some time with the guard and get a lot of payback. Payback in college money—up to $5,000 in education assistance. Plus an additional $2,000 enlistment bonus and a minimum salary of $11,000 over the course of a six-year enlistment. Payback in job skills—training in communications, computers, electronics and the latest technology for an eye-popping resume. Payback in adventure—rappel from a helicopter, drive a tank, scale a mountain. Payback in pride—serve your neighbors when they need you most, through disaster assistance, drug interdiction and dozens of other worthwhile missions, including the chance to serve your country in times of trouble. All it takes is two days a month and about two weeks a year. It's payback time. Call the Guard today.

Candidates pleased overall with primary's outcome advancing said they generally felt good about their performances.

"I am heartened by the public participation our community is having," said Edith Stunkel, who received the most votes.

Stunkel said her first priority is to be the best commissioner she can be, though she will continue to seek voter input until the general election.

"I am very satisfied in how I did, though I am disappointed in the turnout," said incumbent Gene Klingler, who finished third.

Carlin, the highest non-incumbent vote getter, said she was pleased with her showing.

"I feel that this is a very good place to be in heading into the general election."

Tom Whalen said he was disappointed in the turnout, but he hoped more voters would participate in the general election. Whalen finished fourth in the primary.

Steve Hall, who finished fifth, said having a plan from the very beginning helped his campaign.

"I'm a first-time guy, going up against 14-year Gene Klingler, and I was only 400 votes behind him, so, I'm really pleased," he said.

Sixth-place finisher Bob Rogers could not be reached for comment.

Paul Palenske, who finished last, said he is pleased with the outcome of the election.

"At least I shook 'em up and got 'em thinking," he said. "It's refreshing that they took 90 percent of the positions that I took and incorporated them in their own campaigns, and if they follow through, I've already won."

Palenske said he will keep a close eye on the candidates who won the primary.

"I'm going to hold their feet to the fire to see the ones elected hold to what they said they're going to do, and if they don't do it, I'm going to remind them of it," he said.

Month's activities to share information on different cultures

Marcial Riquelme will speak today at 1:30 p.m. in Union 207. His lecture will cover "Indigenous Cultures of South America."

"The speech is about the Guarany Indians of Paraguay. Paraguay is a mestizo (mixed) country with two languages, and both are the official language. It is a very good illustration of a country that follows a assimilation policy of biological and cultural fusion of two different groups," Riquelme said.

Russell Means, a Native American activist and actor, who received national prominence as leader of the American Indian Movement in the 1970s, will speak on April 1 and 2.

Rape defenses decreased

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Intoxication will no longer be a defense for rape under two bills passed Wednesday in the Senate and House of Representatives.

The bills were written in response to a Riley County court case in which a K-State student was allegedly raped at basketball ticket campout. Prosecutors said a suspect in the case was not charged with the crime, in part because the state rape law equated voluntary intoxication with consent to sex.

"It's time we start worrying about the victims instead of pushing their rights aside for the rights of offenders," said Sen. Lillian Papay, R-Great Bend, the author of the bill.

The Senate passed the measure 39-0.

The Senate bill, which would go into effect July 1, broadened the definition of rape to include sexual intercourse with persons incapable of giving consent because they are intoxicated or on drugs.

It also eliminated marriage as a defense for aggravated indecent liberties with a child less than 16 years of age.

Papay said the student had been camping out in a tent the night before tickets went on sale. She had been drinking when the defendant entered her tent.

"She was intoxicated, and he raped her," Papay said. "It goes on all the time."

Papay said she submitted the bill at the urging of Attorney General Bob Stephan, who sent memos urging legislators to rewrite the law.

"There was no dissent among the senators, but it had a little trouble in the House," Papay said.

Rep. Gwen Welshimer, D-Wichita, had requested a hearing on the bill in the House Judiciary Committee in January, but Committee Chairman Mike O'Neal, R-Hutchinson, said her version of the bill was flawed.

A subcommittee on criminal law rewrote the bill at O'Neal's request.

The House Judiciary Committee approved the rewritten bill, and the House passed it Wednesday, 124-0.

Welshimer said she expected the bill to go to the Senate soon and be combined with Papay's bill. She said she believed the final bill would have no trouble being passed into law.

Building casualty of expansion

STEPHANIE HOELZEL

One department on campus that will be losing its home because of the Farrell Library expansion project is the art department.

Gary Woodward, head of the art department, said the Art Building is tentatively scheduled for a March 1, 1994, destruction date.

"We will be moving into Willard Hall by Jan. 1, 1994, before the spring semester starts. There is some empty space in Willard that we will be taking over, as well as some rooms the chemistry and biochemistry will be moving out of," he said.

Woodward said the process of deciding where the different rooms would go started last fall.

"We have pretty much decided which functions would go where. Now, we're in the process of meeting with state architects to work on room design and on what materials we can salvage from the Art Building," Woodward said.

The move into Willard is going to provide the department with more usable space and the opportunity to grow, Woodward said.

"I think this move will be a positive one. We will be able to have more usable space. Right now, some of the rooms in the Art Building also act as hallways. This is very disruptive to classes that are being taught.

"In Willard, there are big hallways that don't run through the rooms. That is what I mean by usable space," Woodward said.

Some students have had concerns as to what the move would do to the department.

"We really need to have our own building.

Right now the Art Building has its own identity, which gives the department its own identity. I think the move will take that identity away," Jim Moody, junior in graphic design, said.

Annette Ferlet, senior in drawing, said she feels the move will be a positive one.

"I have heard many positive reactions to the idea of moving. People are excited about the new space and the idea of having classes that are closer together," Ferlet said.

Woodward said there are hopes that in 10 years all of the art departments will be in Willard.

"We are optimistic that everything will be

Standoff continues, waiting for God's instructions

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WACO, Texas — Federal agents appeared to settle in Wednesday for a long wait to the end of a standoff with a heavily armed religious cult whose leader claims he is waiting for God to tell him what to do.

As the siege continued for a fourth day, officials said Branch Davidian leader David Koresh might have more than 100 followers and a "massive weapons cache" inside his fortified compound.

Two elderly women who left the compound Tuesday had fired machine guns and other weapons during battles Sunday that left perhaps 14 people dead, authorities said. The women faced charges including murder.

Negotiations continued Wednesday. A day earlier, Koresh had promised to immediately and peacefully end the deadlock after a 58-minute taped statement he made was played on radio stations.

"Koresh refused to honor his promise and has indicated he will keep his promise to come out when he receives further instruction from God," FBI Agent Jeffrey Jamar said during the first briefing for reporters since Monday. Koresh stated he had received a message from God instructing him to wait.

Jamar said officers aren't contemplating storming the compound.

"The goal is to resolve this situation ultimately in federal court with no further bloodshed," he said.

On Wednesday afternoon, two portable office buildings were brought to the site, and food for the agents was replenished. In town, hospitals that had been advised Tuesday to prepare for wounded were told they could relax security.

The cult is a well-trained, committed fighting force with a "massive weapons cache" at its disposal, Special Agent Earl Dunagan of the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms said in an affidavit.

Koresh "has told federal law officers words to the effect that they would fight to the end," Dunagan said.

In his affidavit, Dunagan said the two women who left the compound Tuesday "did knowingly and willfully use weapons, including machine guns, to commit the violent crime of murder and attempted murder of federal law enforcement officers."

Margaret Lawson, 75, and Catherine Mattson, 77, were charged with murder, attempted murder, conspiracy and commission of a felony with a firearm.

About 100 federal agents raided the compound Sunday to serve warrants charging Koresh with federal firearms violations.

In addition to four dead federal agents, at least 10 cult members were killed, a federal law enforcement source said on condition of anonymity.

Council becomes national member

Group organizes changes, begins move to ECM office

NICHOLLE FOLSOM
Collegian

The Black Pan-Hellenic Council is in the process of making serious changes within its organization.

"The first thing we really tried to do was have a local chapter established," Council President Charlotte Moore, senior in social work, said. "We really weren't established before now."

The council began by moving into an office March 1 in the ECM building, which houses the Multicultural Center.

Moore said another form of change for the council came when it became a member of the National Pan-Hellenic Council.

"I think it is important for them to be nationally affiliated," Mordean Taylor-Archer, assistant provost of multicultural affairs, said.

She said it will enable the council to attend conferences, know the national guidelines and meet others.

Moore said in order for the Black Pan-Hellenic Council to be affiliated, certain guidelines had to be met.

One guideline was that money raised by the council must be used to benefit others.

"Basically we're a service organization," Moore said. "The question on most predominantly white campuses is should the University set a budget for the council."

Since fundraisers for internal activities are prohibited by national guidelines, the council must now rely on the University for funds.

Another council project, beginning next semester, will be aimed at increasing minority retention.

"Minority retention is really bad on predominantly white campuses," Moore said.

She said many minority students don't stay in college because they don't learn how to manage time, social life and study habits.

The Peer Partner Program will pair sophomores and juniors with freshmen to help them manage time and study habits. Senior council members and new council coordinator, Shirlyn Brown, will supervise the project.

In addition, the council is restructuring how black fraternities and sororities will establish membership.

"We're no longer going to have a pledging process. Instead, it's called an intake process," Moore said. "Students really have to meet the requirements of that specific organization, in which they are wanting to become members."

She said the council has moved to an application system.

Prospective members will attend a series of informal and formal meetings instead of rushing.

The students wanting to be members will apply and give letters of recommendations to the president of the sorority or fraternity. Then, the president will decide on the members, and they will be contacted with another letter inviting them to join the organization or stating why they were not chosen.

MARTHA

An opera for people who hate operas

by Star Hildenbrand

The K-State Players will present the opera, "Martha" March 4, 5 and 6 at McCain Auditorium, as directed by Jerry Langenkamp and Lew Shelton.

"This is an opera for people who don't like opera," Shelton, stage director of "Martha," said.

Others agree that "Martha" does not fit the opera stereotype.

"Most people think of fat ladies and bullhorns when they think of operas," said Nate Hancock, sophomore in music and the cast member who plays the judge.

"This one is not like that. It's pretty modern in that the [English] translation was done by Dr. Sloop four months ago."

Although "Martha" has been performed more than 500 times worldwide, this will be the premiere performance of the opera using Sloop's English translation.

Sloop, a K-State music professor, has written a new translation of the opera to eliminate the ambiguity and heaviness of earlier versions.

The light comic opera, written by the German composer Friedrich von Flotow while he was studying in France, captures the social dichotomy of early 18th-century France.

"This opera is about two aristocratic women who get bored with their court life," said Alicia Shaneyfelt, sophomore in theater and chorus member for the production.

Tired of pleasures at court, Lady Harriet and Nancy decide to go to Richmond Fair disguised as peasant women named Martha and Julia. At the fair, they meet two genuine rustics, Lionel and his half-brother Plunkett.

The two men hire Lady Harriet and Nancy as housekeepers for a year, and they all return to the farm. Everything is fine until Lionel falls in love with Harriet, and then trouble breaks loose.

Shelton said, besides contrasting the values of court and peasant life, the opera succeeds in being the first German comic opera which is entirely without dialogue. In some respects,

J. KYLE WYATT/Collegian

Lady Harriet, center, played by Aggie Callison laments her situation during a rehearsal of "Martha" Sunday night in McCain Auditorium. Plunkett, right, played by Richard Webster, and Nancy, left, played by Juli Borst, are two of the other leading characters. It opens tonight.

"Martha" is more like an operetta or opera-comique because of its lyrical, comic qualities.

"It's been fun music to sing and really entertaining," said Juli Borst, senior in applied music and actress in the role of Nancy.

"I think cute is the operative word," she said.

The other three leading roles are played by Aggie Callison and Keong-Ok Song as Lady Harriet, Rob Fann as Lionel and Richard Webster as Plunkett.

Although "Martha" is not as well-known as "Carmen" or "Phantom of the Opera," it has been performed since the mid-1850s, outliving many other operas.

"This opera is performed a lot, although it is not that well-known here," Shelton said.

"In my research, I found that it is performed at least two to three times a year, some place in the world."

The versatility of its setting is one of the key reasons why "Martha" has remained popular. The 1990 New York City Opera version set the time in the 1920s. Harriet and Nancy were flappers while Lionel and Plunkett were beach bums who became auto mechanics.

In the K-State Players production, the four settings for "Martha" are the play's traditional gold-gilded Baroque setting.

"Mike Amico's (set designer) idea was to make the sets look like they are from a storybook," Hancock said.

If the settings and the rehearsals serve as clues to this week's performances, then "Martha" promises to be unforgettable.

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Seven days won't hurt

THE ISSUE

Firearms in America are woefully unrestricted.

WE SUGGEST

A national computer data base and a seven-day waiting period won't cure the problem but will help it.

A tragic situation in Waco, Texas, is reminding America once again that it needs some form of gun regulation.

David Koresh, a self-proclaimed Jesus Christ, is holed up in a fortified compound, along with at least 75 followers and enough firepower to start a small war.

Four federal agents have been killed and 16 wounded in a stand-off where even federal spokespersons have admitted they're outgunned.

That's a problem, especially considering Koresh's claim that the firepower was acquired through legal means.

Sadly, there's no reason to doubt that claim. Situations ranging from the attempted assassination of Ronald Reagan to the massacre at a cafeteria in Killeen, Texas, have all been committed by people with legally acquired firearms.

The solution is a nationwide computer system combined with a mandatory waiting period.

The computer system would be tied into the FBI data base, and anyone buying a firearm would be required to pass a background check.

No one convicted of a felony crime, or with a history of severe mental illness would be allowed to purchase firearms.

Then, even if the buyer had passed the background check, he or she would be required to wait seven days before taking the gun home.

That policy would provide a cool-down period to help eliminate spur-of-the-moment killings.

The National Rifle Association lobby will claim a loss of the constitutional right to bear arms, but we're not asking for a ban on guns. Hey, if you're not a criminal, sane and you can sit on your hands for a week, you can have your gun.

Inconvenient? Perhaps, but it's a small price to pay for security.

GENERATIONAL SOUP

THE YEAR 2012.

"Dad?"
Yes, son.
"Did you a damn hippie in college?"
Stop talking like your mother.
"What were you doing when the World Trade Center blew up?"
Not paying attention.
"Did people really think they had 'inner children' then?"
Only when they drank too much.
"Did you two-step?"
No, I stayed at home and practiced guitar so all these albums I've sold could put you through college.
"What was multi-culturalism?"
I'm still not sure.

DAVID EUGENE FRESE

"Dad?"
Yes, son.
"Did you smoke marihuana?"
I grew up in the Reagan years, son.

FEBRUARY-MARCH 1993.

Terrorists blowing up New York's World Trade Center. Jesus Christ taking up arms against the feds in Waco, Texas. Local elections on Tuesday, leaving many liquor stores closed and many more winos looking for guns.
Plus, shootings in Kansas, from the Walnut River to the state capital. Baldness related to heart attacks and/or disease.
"The Crying Game." The United States tag-teaming with the Russians to drop packages into Yugoslavia.
Jeez Louise.

TUESDAY.

The movie "Singles." Bridget Fonda as "The Groupie": "When I was a kid I thought we'd be driving flying cars by the time I turned 23. Here I am, 23."
The Nineties. Our lives. I am perplexed as to what will be the label for our generational soup.

Like so. The Forties: The Big One. The Fifties: Big Cars and Wives Happy at Home. The Sixties: Dope Fiends and Free Whoopie. The Seventies: Hank Aaron, Disco and Nixon. The Eighties: Reagan/Bush, Greed, Money.

And the Nineties? Good question.

Garth Brooks has clues but not the answer.

A Fact Sheet from the Bald Man in the Black Hat floated its way into the Collegian offices Monday. Upon seeing it I surreptitiously swiped it, tout de suite.

Born in Yukon, Okla. Played football, basketball, baseball and track at Yukon High. Attended Oklahoma State University, majoring in advertising on a partial athletic scholarship (javelin).

"Musical influences: George Strait, George Jones, James Taylor, KISS, Queen, Dan Fogelberg, Merle Haggard, Kansas, Journey, Boston, Billy Joel."

I would pay good dinero to see Garth Brooks do a "Stone Cold Crazy"/"Race Is On"/"Fire and Rain"/"Rock and Roll Band" medley in demon makeup and platform shoes and spit blood.

THE YEAR 2025.

I remember the good old days.

"Oh, Grandpa Dave, not again."

You simmer down now. You kids are lucky.

"Why's that, Grandpa (old fart)?"

You kids have a culture. Why, when I was a young whippersnapper we were so starved for new things we wore old things. We listened to country songs that sounded like '70s love songs and two-stepped in disco ballrooms. We hung out in coffee shops reciting poetry like they did after the war. We didn't have anything.

"The Civil War?"

World War II.

"And then they elected a dope smuggler for a president (after the actor), and then Jesus Christ blew up the World Trade Center, right, Grandpa?"

Forced "outing" may pose danger for gays

Editor,

I am writing in response to Kelly Klawonn's article on "outing" in the Feb. 24 Collegian. Let me begin by saying I certainly do not support such an exercise in any community.

I have one immediate family member and many friends who are gay. A large percentage of these people hide their sexuality — not because they are ashamed, but because they are scared. Scared of what, you ask? Well, where do I begin? People still lose their jobs because they are homosexual. And that is only one way gays are discriminated against.

All of my life, I've listened to people talk about morals and God in relation to homosexuality. You learn not to speak out for your own sake or the sake of loved ones. Just for the record, I am heterosexual. I am proud to be heterosexual, and I am proud to be a heterosexual with gay friends. I can say with a fair amount of confidence that I won't be beat up on my way to work today. Gay people don't have that luxury so they choose to hide.

There is nothing wrong with gay pride or supporting gay rights. You don't have to be gay to support your friends. However, despite rumors, some people have to stay in the closet. You are not the only type of lesbian, Klawonn. Many gays have families to worry about or the safety of their own children to be concerned for.

Keep in mind that it's not as simple as writing it in the Collegian for some people. I would rather not know than see anyone close to me beat up and hurt ever again.

Community modeled after "nosy-parkers"

Editor,

Geez, Kelly. And I thought my little hometown community was full of nosy-parkers who minded everybody's business but their own. Imagine what it must be like in the gay community.

I personally wish the gay-lesbian movement well in its efforts to achieve legitimacy and equal rights in our society, but this business of "outing" people is indefensible. In fact, it sounds a lot like McCarthyism.

If I should go to a known gay bistro — perhaps with a gay friend — does that give the homo-spotters the right to confront me or to threaten me with public disclosure unless I confess to the world that I'm a lesbian? Will they, like the Nazis, force me to wear the pink triangle if I don't want to, if I'm not even a homosexual?

Is it ever remotely possible that journalists, gay or otherwise, sometimes get their facts wrong or jump to conclusions? Even if Morley Safer was to confront this so-called Doris Leftoe on "60 Minutes," does that make her homosexuality Holy Gospel? This is why "outing" is malicious and harmful.

Gays and lesbians need to realize that this kind of militant behavior is not winning them any points with anyone. You can't force someone to love you, and you can't force people to join your community. If I could offer them any advice, I would say, "Your movement needs more Martin Luther Kings and fewer Joseph McCarthys."

In the meantime, if I think it is necessary for people to know about my sexual identity, I'll wear a big, red button that says, "Ask me about my sexual orientation."

► WAL-MART

Sam Walton was a patriot, not a Marxist

Editor,

I am a three-year, full-time associate at Wal-Mart. The column by Tom Lister in the Feb. 26

Collegian was very unfair to Wal-Mart.

I work on the evening shift, which is mostly composed of K-State students. Every one of us is working there because we are trying to support ourselves while attending school. We are trying to improve ourselves and do a good job for the company. We do not work there because we were assigned there, but because we applied and were accepted from all the applicants as being the best choices for the available positions.

I wear my hair short because I like it that way and because I take pride in my appearance, not because of company policy. The men that work for this company value their position over their hair but are free to quit anytime in order to pursue longer hair. Policy also allows for beards. The cashiers are up front wishing people a nice day because we like being with people, not because of policy.

It was very unfair of Lister to compare Sam Walton to Lenin. Lenin could not play by the rules of his system, so he gathered a military and made everybody play by his rules. Sam Walton took a system and played by the rules. He worked hard and expanded his business. Excellence is the key word, not sluggishness or militarism.

We always need more small businesses in this country. But with proper management and the correct attitude, they will eventually turn into large businesses like Wal-Mart. Sam Walton pursued the American dream and made the most of his business. Would you condemn anyone for doing that?

Wal-Mart can be hazardous to health

Editor,

Thank you, Tom Lister. It's reassuring to know that I'm not the only one who gets sweaty palms when walking into a Wal-Mart. Is it the smoky-throated voice rasping through the intercom that makes my head buzz and my eyes glaze over within the first two minutes?

Or is it the panic over choosing which one of the 20 check-out lines to go through, each with screaming babies and cashiers blurring, "Stan, we need a price check!"

Week after week, I repeat this zombie-like ritual. Are there support groups for people like us?

► THANKS

Bloodmobile is a success thanks to you

Editor,

I cannot begin to express my appreciation to the K-State and Manhattan communities for their participation in the American Red Cross Bloodmobile Feb. 16-19 at the K-State Union.

Although we did not meet our established donor goal of 1,000, we did see 897 donors and collected 814 units.

Remembering that each unit of blood can help as many as four different people, we could reach thousands of persons in need of blood products. So, we do have something to be proud of.

When the Wichita mobile units join forces in one location for a total of four days, it takes much teamwork to make it all work together.

I am especially thankful to all the generous volunteer workers who gave their time to help with this worthwhile cause. Thank you also to the businesses who advertised the bloodmobile on their marquees.

None of us know when we may be the one in an accident or surgery, needing the lifesaving gift of blood. Your generosity will not be forgotten.

The Waco Interpretation

The recent, bloody standoff between federal officers and the Branch Davidians, a group of gun-toting religious wackos in Waco, Texas, (which could well describe half the adult male population on opening day of hunting season) is a good example of the kind of monumental misery that Christianity has historically inflicted and has consistently failed to acknowledge throughout its infamous history.

Christianity's assertion that anyone can twist and pervert any "good" and "well-meaning" philosophy to suit the situation, is a lame excuse at the very least.

BRAD SEABOURN

Vernon Howell, or David Koresh as he is also known, is the current leader of the Branch Davidians, an offshoot sect of the Seventh Day Adventists, one of a group of Protestant Christian churches founded in the United States in the 19th century. Adventists are a broad denomination rooted in Hebrew and Christian prophetism, messianism and various millennial expectations recorded in the Bible, particularly the cryptic books of Daniel and Revelation.

Doctrinal emphasis is traditionally placed upon the Second Coming of Christ and on the Last Judgment, after which the wicked will be destroyed and the "chosen" will be resurrected to live in a restored paradise on Earth, inaugurating Christ's 1,000-year Kingdom.

Apparently, back in the 1930's, the Branch Davidians were a pacifistic (that's right, pacifistic) group that broke away from the slightly more militant Seventh Day Adventists at that time. Since then, modern-day Adventists have become more peace-loving and the Branch Davidians ... well, clearly not the kind of people you would want to invite over for a barbecue.

Koresh claims the Davidians think of themselves as "God's marines," and "If you can't die for God, you can't live for God." Most of his followers believe he is Jesus Christ. In fact, Koresh once claimed, "If the Bible is true, then I'm Christ."

Setting aside the legal question of weapons and violence (which has consistently followed religion through much of recorded history), who can legitimately question the Davidians' fundamental religious beliefs and motives? Do they not have a right to their "interpretation" of the Bible? Isn't that what the Protestant Reformation was all about?

I find it amusing that Christians will frown and raise their eyebrows at the mention of the word "cult," yet is that not what Christianity is, a cult — a system or community of religious worship and ritual based upon the obsessive devotion or veneration of a person, principle or ideal? If not today, then most certainly at its origin, almost 2,000 years ago.

Yet, for all the ideals and "truth" that Christianity professes to reveal, the enormous damage that has been wrought on mankind by this "cult" is rarely mentioned and never taught. Why?

If Christians are so concerned with truth, why not present the whole sordid past for intellectual digestion each Sunday?

The reason is it would fill very few pews and even fewer collection plates.

Can any professing Christian logically argue that what their particular sect believes is somehow more divinely inspired or theologically correct than what Vernon Howell and the wacky Davidians have chosen to believe? I do not think they can.

And, according to the Bible, neither did the Jews who crucified a seditious cult leader named Jesus almost 2,000 years ago. Of course, THAT cult was different.

Not.

COMMENTARY

ALCOHOL ON CAMPUS

University double standard is appalling

Editor,
As a three-time committee member and ring announcer of the now-defunct Sig Ep Fite Nite, I am inherently appalled by the lack of parity shown by the University toward off-campus living groups.

Why is a party where participants are encouraged to throw up allowed in Marlatt Hall, while Sigma Phi Epsilon's request to serve beer at the region's largest grossing philanthropy was denied year after year on the pretext that K-State policy forbids alcohol on campus?

Don't get me wrong. I do not object to alcohol being served on campus. What I do object to is the monumental double-standard imposed on greek organizations by this University's administration.

Brian White, creator of Yakfest, gave the fundamental reason for the party as a way "to keep people in the dorms."

Call me crazy, but didn't the administration lobby the Interfraternity Council/Panhellenic Council to pass phenomenally cumbersome "dry rush" policies regarding the recruitment of new members?

I do not criticize Brian White. A responsible party is a good time for everyone. I do criticize Chuck Werring, the director of Housing and Dining Services, and Loleta Sump, the special events coordinator for the Division of Facilities, for their bureaucratic, inconsistent treatment of special-interest groups here at K-State.

ECONOMICS

Clinton should look to prospering Argentina

Editor,
If Clinton really wants to cure the deficit, maybe he should take some lessons in Latin American economics.

Argentina has had a great deal of success in reducing its deficit — not by imposing deficit reduction and austerity on its people, but through economic growth. Argentina focused on establishing a sound currency and fiscal incentives to promote growth. Unlike our government, it cut income tax rates and had no tax on capital gains. As a result of this economic growth program, Argentina's treasury income actually rose, and it managed to balance its budget.

Brazil, much like what the United States may do, attacked the deficit as the primary emphasis in its economic programs. But Brazil's expenditure cuts and austerity programs have not brought about a deficit reduction, but a decline in economic growth.

The lesson for President Clinton is — sacrifice is not a necessity for deficit reduction. Sound deficit reduction programs must be built within the framework of economic growth programs. And, if we want fiscal policy that speeds economic growth, with or without the deficit number, we know what needs to be done: hold government spending to essentials, keep marginal tax rates low, keep the dollar sound, let the price mechanism work and avoid unnecessary regulation and costs. The Clinton administration must focus on economic growth programs and stop focusing on a deficit that becomes less and less attached to reality.

ISSUES

Subtle segregation in K-State Union areas

Editor,

I have attended K-State for two years. I was glad when the K-State Union became a non-smoking building. This allows me to go to the Union and enjoy the services that I pay for through my student fees. I also enjoy studying in Union Station.

The one thing that surprises me about the Union Station eating area is that it is segregated. The black students sit in one area, the international students sit in another area, and the white students sit everywhere else. In this day, it surprises me and makes me sad that we still have segregation, especially at K-State.

During Black History Month, there have been two black students sitting in the "white" section. This is wonderful. I know it took these two young men a large amount of courage to sit in the "white" section. The young men have received too many stares and mean looks. I want to encourage other black students to sit anywhere they want to in the Union Station eating area. You are always welcome to sit at my table. I'm the one sitting in the corner with my books open and pretending to be studying.

BEING CAREFUL ...

Pedestrians half responsible for safety

Editor,

I only have one thing to say to all of you whining pedestrians complaining about crosswalks and campus safety. The law may give you the right of way, but it does not give you the right to be stupid. I nearly ran over a few people last week as I was driving down Manhattan Avenue.

Most pedestrians figure, "If I step out to cross the street, that car will have to stop." Perhaps — but use your own judgment. If you step out in the street nowhere near a crosswalk, you risk the chance of being hit. I can guarantee that if you do this, I will run you down. If you are in a crosswalk and I have very little room to stop, you better be alert, because I may hit you then. Yes, I realize that many drivers are pretty careless, but pedestrians need to be a little less assuming and a little more careful in their actions.

You can never assume that the world stops for you, because it usually doesn't.

INTELLECTUAL SUICIDE

Many great thinkers were Christians

Editor,

Brad Seabourn's view that millions of "unthinking people" are practicing emotional and intellectual suicide by adopting and practicing Christian morality is a reckless statement that seriously jeopardizes his credibility.

A brief analysis of some of the more well-known persons who were practicing Christians may be in order.

To begin with, he would have a very difficult time convincing me that Jesus Christ was a non-thinking man. What about men like Augustine of Hippo, Paul of Tarsus, Thomas Aquinas, Martin Luther, John Calvin, Sir Thomas More, Abraham Lincoln, C.S. Lewis, G.K. Chesterton, Louis Pasteur, Woodrow Wilson, Archbishop Sheen and Archbishop Tutu, to name but a few.

Generally speaking, pride goes before a fall, and from Brad's pedestal, it must be a long way down.

CABLE TV

Article information was not verified

Editor,

As a subscriber to and advertiser in the Kansas State Collegian, I was very disappointed with your article of Feb. 26 which described our channel realignment. In the article, you quote Wade Willson as saying that he and his roommates pay "$52 per month for expanded basic, Encore and HBO." The actual price is $38.04. I find this to be a rather large discrepancy.

Generally, I enjoy your newspaper and commend your professionalism as journalists. In this instance, however, your information was not verified and proved to be totally inaccurate.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

K-State scheduled to play Northern Iowa

But weather may postpone Cats' home opener

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Just as Coach Mike Clark and his baseball team took the tarps off of Frank Myers Field Wednesday afternoon, sleet and rain began falling from the overcast sky.

Weather permitting, the K-State baseball team will begin its home schedule today against Northern Iowa. The 3 p.m. game with the Panthers is the first of five scheduled home games.

If today's game against Northern Iowa is canceled, the Cats' home opener will be against the Washington Huskies Friday night at the Dean Evans Stadium in Salina.

Both teams come to Manhattan for a double-header Saturday evening, and K-State will finish the weekend playing host to Emporia State Sunday.

Inclement weather canceled the scheduled home opener last Sunday with Missouri Western.

"We are going to do our best to get it dried and ready to play," said Clark, whose team has been practicing inside Brandeberry Indoor Complex because of the poor weather.

"It doesn't look too good."

Clark said the team would use heaters to dry the first- and third-base paths.

"We try to get the tarp off the ground and blow warm air underneath it," he said. "We could firm it up and get a tractor on it and drag it."

Senior outfielder Brian Culp said for the work the players have done to fix the baseball diamond, they should be given some recognition.

"After four years of this," he said, "I think I should get an honorary degree in horticulture."

K-State played its first game Feb. 19 in Arkansas. K-State lost 10-1, but only one of the three scheduled games could be played.

"The team is ready to play, and we need to play," Clark said. "We are at the point where inside practices are worthless."

Today's game will be the first game for the Panthers as well.

"It's one of those years where there's two teams that haven't been outside," Clark said. "Neither team has an advantage. The teams that we play later on are going to have an advantage. Some teams have already played 15 games."

Northern Iowa finished last season with a 22-34 record and have 15 returning lettermen. The Panthers beat the Cats 8-2 last year.

Robert Merriman — a transfer from Barton County Community College — will be K-State's starting pitcher, Clark said.

"I'm excited to get the start," Merriman said. "I rely more on my breaking balls than on my fast balls."

K-State is scheduled to play Washington Friday in Salina. The Huskies have a 4-7 record and play today at Wichita State. Washington has won three of its last four games.

The Cats met Washington for the first time at the Aggie Continental Classic in College Station, Texas, in 1991. The Huskies took two games, 14-8 and 6-3, from the Cats.

Emporia State, which will be in Manhattan Sunday, has an 0-3 record. The last time both teams met, the Hornets beat the Cats, 13-8. Before the loss, the Cats won the previous four games dating back to 1988.

Intramural hoops in high gear

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

Molly Short (89), of the Team X intramural basketball squad, reaches for a loose ball Wednesday night at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. Semi-final games in the women's division were last night, and Team X won its contest with the Junior Vets, 50-45.

Finals in all divisions coming up

ERIC MOORE
Collegian

In less than a week, the intramural basketball champions will be decided.

Will the rankings be representative of the results, or are upsets in our midst?

"If people want to see some really good close games, equal to or above high-school level, they should come out and observe some of the great talent in the next few games," said Bryan Skinner, assistant intramural director.

For the teams in the residence hall, fraternity, independent, 6 feet and under and women's divisions, the finals are tonight at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

The teams in the co-rec division will compete for the No. 1 slot Sunday, and the men's all-university semifinals will be on the same day.

The men's all-university game will be at 7 p.m. Monday.

For the women, Team X is the top-ranked team.

In the co-rec division, Champs To Be are listed as the No. 1-ranked team.

For the men, Dunks and Treys are listed as first in the rankings.

"Right now, we are not playing too bad," said Lance Liby, senior in finance and the manager of Champs To Be.

"We are just trying to keep guys healthy," he said. "We have only got six guys right now, but we have a good chance of winning."

Liby said he thinks his team's greatest advantage is size.

"We have a big team," he said. "Two guys are 6 foot 4 inches, one guy is 6'5", and we have another who is 6'7". So we get a few dunks in here and there."

"We were surprised that we were ranked No. 1 because we weren't ranked all season," he said. "This puts a lot more pressure on our team, because teams seem to be much more ready to play us now."

The intramural regular season at the Rec was completed by Feb. 28.

Entries for intramural softball teams need to be turned in from March 8-11.

The intramural softball season officially begins on March 29.

Hawks wrap up Big 8 title

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE — Steve Woodberry came off the bench to score 26 points, the most by any Kansas player in two seasons, and the eighth-ranked Jayhawks clinched their third straight Big Eight title Wednesday night with a 94-83 victory over Nebraska.

Seniors Rex Walters, Adonis Jordan and Eric Pauley all reached double figures in their final home game as the Jayhawks (23-5 overall, 10-3 Big Eight) won their 41st conference championship.

Nebraska (19-9, 7-6) lost its 11th consecutive game in Allen Fieldhouse, where the Huskers are 6-34.

Nebraska, which came into the game with a chance to forge a three-way tie for the title, quickly whittled Kansas' 10-point halftime lead to 57-51, but a bucket by Woodberry sparked a 13-4 run to make it 70-55. Woodberry had three inside buckets in the run as the Jayhawks continually got open underneath.

Late three-pointers by Jamar Johnson and Eric Piatkowski sliced the lead to 90-83 with less than a minute remaining, but Patrick Richey's two free throws thwarted the rally, and Walters' driving layup with 15 seconds remaining clinched the victory.

Kansas outscored Nebraska 26-5 at the free-throw line.

Eric Pauley and Woodberry combined to score 30 of Kansas' points in the first half and triggered a 17-3 run as the Jayhawks mounted their biggest lead at 45-29 with about eight minutes left. Walters, after missing his first four shots, got the spree started with a pair of quick buckets, and Woodberry then added a long three-pointer.

But Nebraska, which has not won or shared a conference title since 1950, scored nine straight points in a 64-second span. Jamar Johnson hit a 10-footer, and Piatkowski drove in for two, was fouled and made the free throw to make it 45-36.

Erick Strickland then swiped a Kansas pass and drove in for a layup, slicing the lead to 45-38.

Walters hit two free throws, and Pauley added a 10-foot jumper for a 48-38 lead at halftime. Walters wound up with 19 points, Pauley 18 and Jordan 10.

Piatkowski had 23 points for Nebraska and Johnson finished with 18.

Iowa State tops Colorado, 67-66, with controversial shot at buzzer

ASSOCIATED PRESS

BOULDER, Colo. — Justus Thigpen's three-pointer at the buzzer gave Iowa State a controversial 67-66 victory over Colorado in a game that had 12 lead changes in the second half.

The win Wednesday night was the Cyclones' first conference road win of the season.

The game was deadlocked 27-27 at the half, then saw-sawed to a dramatic conclusion. Iowa State improved to 18-9. The Cyclones are 7-6 in the conference and tied K-State, Nebraska and Oklahoma for third place.

Colorado (10-15, 2-11) took a 65-64 lead on Donnie Boyce's jumper. With 2.2 seconds remaining, Ted Allen's free throw gave the Buffaloes a 66-64 lead.

Thigpen took an inbound pass in Colorado territory, dribbled across half court to the three-point line and tossed up his successful prayer shot.

The announcer said it was a two-point shot and the game would go into overtime. But the officials ruled it a three-pointer.

CU coach Joe Harrington argued that Thigpen had not released the ball at the buzzer.

Head official Jerry Petro said confusion resulted because "we couldn't get the coaches out of the way to make sure we had a three-all in agreement. We had a three-pointer, and it went in."

Petro and the other two officials, J.C. Liembach and Bill Kennedy, all said the shot was up before the horn.

Harrington argued otherwise.

"The guy dribbles almost full court in 2.2 seconds? You be the judge," he said. "Two officials called it a two and one guy called it a three. No one knew what was going on."

Thigpen led the Cyclones with 19 points, 16 of them in the second half — including five three-pointers. The Cyclones hit only 1-of-11 three-point attempts in the first half, then got the range and nailed 6-of-9 in the second from long range.

The excitement of fishing for just $327.14

Last summer, I decided I was going to splurge. I went to Wally World and whipped out the plastic. I decided my quarry of the day was going to be the elusive Tuttle Creek catfish.

I had to have everything that a modern angler had to have in order to have fun.

I decided I needed a reel and purchased a Pro Max baitcaster for $169.97. I coupled that beautiful work of art with a flippin' stick for $69.99. I filled the baitcaster with Magnum 7/20 mono-filament.

This special line is oval shaped and made especially so it won't backlash. And it was only $10.96. But a good fisherman is always prepared. So, I bought a bottle of Tangle Free line lubricant for $4.27.

I was getting excited. So I bought a $1 practice plug to perfect my casting technique at home. And to top off my new rod and reel combination, I purchased two high-tech audible fish alarms (two fishing pole bells) for $1.27. These would let me know the instant I had a nibble.

I strolled over one aisle and began to decide on my next purchase. I bought two state-of-the-art visual-spherical fish detectors of fluorescent color (76-cent bobbers). Just in case I was going to be catching them well into the night, I purchased a lighted battery-operated bobber for $2.96.

My worms were going to travel first class, so I purchased a Brown Bear Bait's Air Cooled Bait Bed for $5.69. I quickly grabbed the Magic Worm Bedding at $1.98, so my worms would reside in the most comfortable dirt.

The rocky Riley County soil just would not do.

I also purchased a $2.37 bottle of Catfish Scent to spray on my worms just in case they had a little problem with W.O.

For when I was going to be reeling them in, I bought several amenities.

To release the hook from a fish's mouth safely, you must use a $3.78 Hook-out or face the dire consequences of actually having to touch the fish.

Just in case I was forced to touch the catfish, I bought a bottle of Non-Scents for fishermen at $1.96.

For the Moby Dick that I was sure to catch, I purchased a Zebco De-liar with tape measure for $3.47. This way, I could document my catch by showing the fish on the scale to some fisherman I would never see again — and then claim that I have witnesses.

For the final rally, I was going to outfit me.

My $6.96 Bill Dance Polarized fishing sunglasses really got me dreaming about spying on those lunkers. I then purchased a fishing vest for $29.99. I had to have somewhere to put my hooks, weights, swivels and spherical fish detectors. I topped it all off with a $9.00 gore-tex fishing hat.

After dropping some serious dough and surviving the journey out of you-know-where and its parking lot, I traveled to my favorite spot. I was feeling stressed out and tense from the shopping.

As I walked down to my spot, I passed an older fellow. He was sitting beside the bank half asleep in his fold-up chair. He was basking in the warm spring sun with his old cane pole loosely cradled in his aged hands.

I walked past him, noticed his empty stringer and his coffee can full of worms. I asked him how he was doing.

The old man peeked out from under an old and ragged straw hat, looked around the lake, stared at my ridiculous outfit, smiled a huge smile and said, "Fine, just fine — they haven't bothered me yet."

Debaters win highest award at tournament

RANCE AMES

Collegian

The K-State debate team won the sweepstakes in a debate tournament at the University of Nevada Las Vegas Saturday, Sunday and Monday.

The sweepstakes is the highest award given to a school as a whole at a tournament.

"We have won first in the sweepstakes competition in every tournament we have been to this year that has offered the sweepstakes," Susan Stanfield, coach for the debate team, said.

There were more than 100 two-person teams from about 35 colleges competing in the tournament, she said.

The top 16 teams go to the single-elimination rounds, and there are three divisions: senior, junior varsity and novice, she said.

"K-State had three teams tie for fifth in the senior division and one team place third in the junior varsity division," Stanfield said.

The members of the senior divisions teams were Jill Baisinger, senior in history and Spanish; K.J. Wall, senior in speech; Teri Richardson, sophomore in psychology; Matt Reagan, sophomore in political science; Jason Klein, junior in history; and Dave Devereaux, junior in speech.

The team of Brent Siemers, sophomore in economics and political science, and Amy Fellows, freshman in political science, placed third in the junior varsity division.

K-State also had four debaters win individual speaker awards. Klein placed second, Devereaux fourth, and Richardson placed seventh in the senior division. Siemers placed fourth in the junior varsity division.

"The UNLV tournament was interesting for us because it gave us a look at different debate teams and styles that we don't usually see when competing in the Midwest," Stanfield said.

This year's debate topic is "United Nations implementation of the universal declaration of human rights is more important than preserving state's sovereignty," Devereaux said.

"There are usually eight rounds before the elimination rounds, and each team argues the affirmative four times and the negative of the topic four times," Devereaux said.

The national debate tournament is March 26-29 in Towson, Md.

"We placed third last year, and I have every reason to believe we will do as well or better this year," Stanfield said. "Our team is older and has more experience this year."

COMMUNITY

Bowling Classic's goal to raise $40,000

KRISTI HUMSTON

Collegian

Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Manhattan is offering an opportunity to score some points.

The 1992 Bowling Classic, a yearly event to raise money for the Big Brothers/Big Sisters organization, is officially underway.

The project helps finance a program serving kids from the community that have a void in their lives and need the attention of a caring adult.

Money from the Bowling Classic allows Big Brothers/Big Sisters to recruit, screen and match volunteers to local kids needing the extra support, encouragement and energy beyond what a single parent can provide.

Gwyn Crumplar, executive director of Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Manhattan, said the Bowling Classic raises one-half of the organization's yearly funds. The other half is provided from the city and the United Way.

"The more money we bring in from our fundraiser, the more kids can be matched through the community," Crumplar said.

"I want to make $40,000 and we really need to if at all possible — and that's asking an awful lot."

Last year the organization raised

The Bowling Classic is March 13-20. League bowlers will participate at their regular bowling time during the week, and the public can bowl their two games during Celebrity Days, March 13-14 at K-State Union recreation center lanes and Wildcat Lanes.

A completed sponsor sheet is the only price of admission, and free drawings during Celebrity Days will provide an opportunity for prizes. Prizes will also be awarded to the top money raisers based on paid pledges. The individual with the most pledges will receive a color television and VCR.

"We are trying to get greek houses to participate," Crumplar said.

This year, the organization is starting something new and will present a traveling trophy to the top house.

Sponsor sheets for the Bowling Classic can be picked up at the Big Brothers/Big Sisters office or from one of the local bowling centers. Bowling lanes and times for Celebrity Days must be reserved by calling the Big Brothers/Big Sisters office.

The organization is also seeking volunteers to become big brothers or sisters.

To become a volunteer, individuals must be at least 18 years old, own a car with insurance and be able to contribute three to six hours a week for at least a year. Volunteers undergo a very thorough screening process before being matched with children between the ages of 6 and 17.

Karla Kubitz, assistant professor of kinesiology, is the 1993 Big Sister of the Year. She has been matched for almost two years and said she believes all types of people are needed for the program.

"The organization needs someone who would be willing to commit and likes to be with kids," she said. "It's important to the kids that you keep your word."

For individuals who cannot meet the requirements, Friends of Big Brothers/Big Sisters, a K-State branch of the organization, offers another opportunity to get involved and spend time with unmatched children.

Matt Besch, president of the group and a sophomore in public relations, said Friends of Big Brothers/Big Sisters will help with the Bowling Classic and is also planning an Easter Egg Hunt. About 40 students are involved with the group.

Big Brothers/Big Sisters is currently supervising 166 matches, but still has another 45 children who are waiting for a big brother or big sister.

"College students are real good role models," Crumplar said. "They don't need to be trained and they are just good people with good morals. Sixty percent of our Bigs are K-State students."

ART

Nude models accept body, job

MICHELLE SMITH
Collegian

Students looking for a way to help cover college expenses might consider modeling for figure drawing classes in the art department. But models beware, getting naked is part of the job description.

The art department likes to have at least two different models a week so students keep observing instead of falling into a habit, said Duane Noblett, drawing area coordinator for the art department.

"The models earn about half what they do at other schools. So, if we find someone who is willing to work, we let them work as much as they want," Noblett said.

This semester, there are two beginning and one advanced figure drawing classes, Gary Woodward, head of the art department, said. The classes are required for art majors.

The models are most often K-State students, although sometimes they are townspeople. The job attracts all different types of students, not just art majors, Woodward said.

Ramona Vreeland, junior in creative writing, literature and women's studies, is a model for the figure drawing classes this semester. Vreeland considers the modeling more than just a job.

"My feeling was that, as a woman, I accept my body as it is. I wanted to then present it to others so they can learn to draw from it," Vreeland said.

Vreeland models once a week for a beginning figure drawing class. Occasionally, she will model for a Thursday evening class that is open to the public. Members of that class pay a fee that covers the entire semester.

She began by modeling for an advanced figure drawing class. The fact they were used to nude models helped ease any awkwardness. That is not the case with the beginning class.

"It depends on the group you are in front of. I am just getting comfortable with the Figure Drawing I class," Vreeland said.

Michelle Brueggemann, senior in apparel design, is taking a beginning figure drawing class as a requirement. Brueggemann admits that at first, drawing a nude model was awkward.

"At first you feel like you are just staring at this naked person. Now, it doesn't seem like such a big deal," she said.

Brueggemann said she had been putting off taking the class for a couple of years.

This type of fear and reluctance is another reason Vreeland said she decided to be a model.

"There is such a fear of the human body. Nakedness is viewed as either evil or sexual. Actually, nakedness is very natural. It's something to be revered," Vreeland said.

Noblett said nakedness is a good way to learn about proportion, shapes, technique and tone.

Brueggemann said she agreed the modeling is helpful.

"I think, compared to my other drawing classes, I've learned a lot. Right now, we are working on tone," she said. "They use different lighting to create different tones."

The classes are limited to 25 students. Students form a circle, and the model poses in the middle.

The first series of poses are action poses that last a minute or less. Then the poses last longer, from five to 20 minutes. These longer poses can sometimes be tricky, Vreeland said.

"My legs have fallen asleep. One time I hyperextended my knees. So, they had to let the class out early," Vreeland said.

After the drawings are complete, Vreeland said she likes to see how the artists have drawn her.

"The neatest thing is when I see someone who draws my face. Then I know they see me as more than just a body," she said.

K-STATE ELECTIONS

Running mates focus on promises

Parking and traffic congestion, important issues for Walters, Bautista

WENDY JO BARRETT
Collegian

"When Mr. Bautista and I announced our candidacy back in February, we made a promise to the students of K-State that the communication process between the students and their government begins now, with this campaign," said Charles Walters, junior in history, political science and international studies.

Walters is a candidate for student body president and has already done work on keeping true to his early campaign promises.

Ian Bautista, senior in political science, Spanish and Latin American studies, is Walters' running mate in the election and has worked with him on setting their ideas in motion.

"No one issue is on more students' minds than parking and traffic congestion. I have met with leaders of the Manhattan community as well as leaders from within the University administration and with people from President McClaskey's administration," Walters said.

The University will undertake major construction projects that will interfere with our already overburdened parking situation this fall and into next year, he said.

"We have to do something now, before all the construction is under way," Walters said.

A study now being done of Parking Services doesn't include all the people it should, he said. He emphasized the importance of including all students' concerns in the decision-making process.

"That will mean access to residence halls, Jardine Terrace, off-campus residences as well as service for the physically disabled students," he said.

Walters and Bautista also have looked into the idea of a book cooperative among students. They have talked with the Union Bookstore manager and said it is still a working idea.

Bautista said he encourages students to continue writing to the Collegian with ideas regarding Student Senate. He is following up on an idea expressed in a letter to the editor last week.

"This is the time for brainstorming ideas. We want students to continue commenting on ways to make student government better so we can make needed changes," Bautista said.

Both candidates are working to expand U-LearnN's services; establish a Student Governing Association hotline that anyone can use and promote legislation to delay any vote on fee increases for a set length of time.

This would guarantee that every student interested in the student government issue would have the time to look at every angle, he said.

Progress has been made on all issues first addressed, and both candidates urge students with ideas to contact them.

"We are getting a lot of the footwork out of the way now. So, it will be a transition into office rather than just a beginning," Walters said.

ALUMNI

Best and brightest chosen for board

"We had one of the toughest selection processes. I think that showed the kind of caliber of students that K-State has to offer."

BRAD BEETS
STUDENT ALUMNI BOARD ADVISOR

LYNN ANDERSON
Collegian

The KSU Alumni Association has chosen 10 new students from a total of 75 applications to be active on its 28 member Student Alumni Board.

"We pride ourselves in the best and the brightest," said Brad Beets, Student Alumni Board advisor and director of alumni clubs. "We had one of the toughest selection processes. I think that showed the kind of caliber of students that K-State has to offer."

Once integrated into the board, the members take on two primary goals, Beets said.

"They assist with student recruitment," Beets said. "They will also serve as representatives on our student panels."

The student recruitment consists of college nights in which the students on the board visit eight cities in search of prospective high-school graduates.

"Our main goal this spring is to evaluate how we do college nights," Beets said. "It's an ongoing training process. Representatives from each of the colleges help make sure the students are well-versed in all different aspects of the colleges. We have training from the deans and associate deans on what should be known."

Other functions of the board include supporting the alumni association through promotion of its reunions, traveling to alumni student events, helping with Alumni Association Tradition Telefund and attending the optional fall conference.

As far as promotion of the association to K-State students, Beets said the board deals mostly with prospective students and alumni.

"I'd like to see a main goal be the opportunity for Student Alumni Board to promote and make more aware to students what we offer," Beets said.

Some student promotional tactics have been the survival kits offered during finals, the annual parent and student golf tournament, and the senior send-off.

Increased implementation of promotional programs is costly as well as time consuming.

"We're on a set number and set budget with not a ton of excess time," President of the Alumni Board Jon Hixson, senior in milling science and management, said. "Programs like that take considerable planning."

A large portion of board's time is spent organizing for the April 3 Student Life Workshop that takes place in conjunction with the All-University Open House, Hixson said.

"We are making some major changes this year," Hixson said. "We were too closely related to college nights. Students who had been to an alumni college night and open house workshop were seeing too much mimicking."

Beets said he hopes to update all of the board programs.

"We hope to enhance our programs and bring them into the 90's," Beets said. "There are a lot of things happening, and I think we should show K-State is dealing with them."

ESSENTIALS

He gives a lot of thought to thinking on the pot

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have a problem. I am not gay, so I don't want to have sex with my roommate. I am of American descent, so I have no language problems, except in Cardwell Hall. I don't need an allowance, since the last athletic event I participated in was the cat tail at the 1992 K-State vs. Missouri basketball game. Money is in short supply, but a pint here and there will pay for a meal or two.

My real concern is for national security. Why are bathroom stall dividers always fastened with screws that can't be removed?

I know that if I were going to steal something, the first thing would be a bathroom stall. In Seaton Hall, Cardwell and other buildings on campus, the toilet paper is pad-locked to the wall. I find this ridiculous as well as understandable because toilet paper was a highly valuable item on the Soviet black market.

I am also curious as to why there is a chalkboard in the second floor men's restroom located near the architecture office in Seaton Hall. Is it in case a student comes up with a brilliant idea while performing a No. 2? Or maybe the University had a couple extra bucks and thought, "Hey, why not a chalkboard in the john?"

High on (toilet) pot

DEAR HIGH,

It sounds like you've been giving this toilet situation quite a bit of thought.

I'll try to answer some of your questions.

I'll bet the reason bathroom stall dividers are securely fastened is to prevent the removal of bathroom stalls by people such as yourself. Bathroom stall dividers, which may seem like fleeting and temporary objects to you, are actually devices intended to be semi-permanent.

I'd imagine that toilet paper dispensers are also fastened to prevent their removal.

The chalkboard, now that's a tougher question.

I'd bet it was put there to safeguard against the damage caused by graffiti, yet provide would-be graffiti artists a means to vent their pent-up artistic and philosophic urges.

But you might be right. Someone might actually have said, "Hey, why not a chalkboard in the john?"

Are you seeing the bigger picture?

You see, if the bathroom wall dividers are protected from graffiti they will have to be replaced less frequently — which is good because their firmly secured screws make it difficult for people to remove them.

I hope this helps.

Taking time off can be beneficial

ROBBIE SPEARS
Collegian

Taking a semester or year off can be helpful and necessary for some students at K-State.

John Hower, senior in marketing, said he took a year off from school to gain experience for the future by working as a sales representative for It's Creek To Me.

"I thought taking a year off was a good opportunity to gain experience in the retail marketing field. I know my experience will help me in the future," he said.

Hower said he thinks school is a lot easier since he's been away from it for a while.

"I've finally got my head screwed on right. School's easier because of the knowledge and experience I gained with my job. Plus, I apply myself better than I did in the past," he said.

Hower said not only was it a learning experience, but he had a lot of fun.

"I loved it. I had a real good time. I even made a lot of money."

Doug Dinkel, junior in marketing and bartender at Christopher O' Bryan's, is taking a semester off. He said most of the money he is making is going toward bills.

"I'm not making any savings, but after I pay bills I do have some extra cash," he said.

Dinkel said he is taking the semester off because he was caught in between majors.

"I'm taking it off, because I was taking a lot of courses that I had no enthusiasm for," he said.

Since working full time, Dinkel said he has learned a lot.

"I realize that to get anywhere you have to have a college diploma.

"I also learned that a semester is longer than what I thought it was. I have so much time right now. I wish I had something to study for," he said.

Dinkel said he would advise anyone to take a semester off.

"Taking a semester off is pretty healthy. If a student is frustrated with college it's a good thing to do," he said.

Jill Turnbull, senior in hotel restaurant management, said she took a semester off to work at the Walt Disney Company in Florida.

"I just decided I needed a break," she said.

Turnbull said she learned a lot about other cultures as well.

"Where I lived there were students from 12 different countries. I learned a lot about cultural diversity.

"The job helped me gain experience in my field, and that will help me in the future," she said.

Standoff continues pending God's orders

Newspapers have reported the death toll may be even higher. Officials have confirmed only two deaths inside the compound; Koresh said he was wounded and his 2-year-old daughter was killed.

"There are some bodies," Jamar said, but he didn't know how many. He said three were wounded, but earlier reports put the number much higher.

Jamar said negotiators had been told 43 men, 47 women and 20 children remain inside. Eighteen children have been released since Sunday.

The 77-acre fortified compound includes underground passages and reportedly a firing range. Neighbors have reported hearing gunfire from time to time.

U.S. Attorney Ron Ederer said all adults inside the compound would likely face criminal charges.

Dunagan's affidavit said, "The heavy fusillade of bullets that came from within the site was such that all of the conspirators were involved." Video from the shootout shows heavy gunfire from within as cult members fired through walls.

"There is no doubt they were expecting our arrival," said Dan Hartnett, associate director for Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

In Washington, Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen, who oversees the bureau, said agents had received good training and displayed incredible bravery.

"Obviously when all of this is through, when you have a major operation like that, there will be an evaluation after the fact as to its effectiveness," said Bentsen, a former U.S. senator from Texas.

under one roof in 10 years. That means moving all of the studios out of West Stadium and putting them in Willard. The new building will give us the opportunity to grow," Woodward said.

Moody said easier access to getting into art classes should come with the new space.

"I think more people will be able to get into the art classes they need with the increase in space, plus the facilities will be better suited for classes. I also think the new building will provide better ventilation and a better learning environment," he said.

"The Art Building is the best kept secret on campus. There is good talent and an excellent faculty. The expansion will help to draw students and faculty into the art department here on campus."

Telefund reaches goal

LYNN ANDERSON
Collegian

The Alumni Association Tradition Founders Telefund ended Monday with the beginning goal of $20,000 in pledges collected.

"It was very successful," Brad Beets, director of alumni clubs, said.

Beets said Sunday night $12,519 was pledged, and that, along with Monday night's $10,680 contribution, tallied a total of $23,199.

Amy Renz, associate director of the Alumni Association, said the telefund raises about one-fifth of the Tradition Founders Fund.

The fund accounts for 10 percent of the operating budget for the Alumni Association, Renz said.

"The money raised helps support homecoming, parents' weekend, alumni programming, and club activities," Renz said.

The Student Alumni Board and alumni staff help volunteer and do the calling to rack up the pledges.

"I think the fact that the student has taken the time to call means so much to the alumni," she said. "They often want to know more about the students' major and activities. The alumni often talk to the K-State students in order to find out what's going on at the University."

Two evenings are set aside for the telefund, with three hours of calling each evening, Renz said.

"So, with six hours and 40 callers, we reach between 13,000 and 15,000 alumni," she said.

Some Student Alumni Board members found the experience to be entertaining.

"It's a fun atmosphere," said Heather Riley, KSU Student Ambassador and Student Alumni Board member. "We have a competition to see who gets the biggest pledge. We make it fun. We have pizza and share stories."

FACULTY MEMBERS
WE NEED YOUR IDEAS!

The K-State Union Governing Board (UGB) is an organization of ten students, three faculty members, and one alumni appointee (usually a student). The purpose of UGB is to serve as the general governing and policy-making body of the K-State Union. The board works with the K-State Union staff to help make the K-State Union best serve the Kansas State University student and University community. Meetings are held from 5:30 p.m. to 7 p.m. on the first Thursday of each month. If you have talent and a few hours available each month to contribute to bettering the K-State Union operation, consider completing an application for UGB membership.

Position available:
One (1) two-year voting

Forms for making application are available in the K-State Union Director's Office. Applications close at 5 p.m., March 18, 1993. Interviews will begin April 1, 1993.

FBI makes arrest in NYC bombing

Suspect caught while trying to claim deposit on destroyed Ryder rental van

ASSOCIATED PRESS

"This investigation clearly is not finished, but a large first step has been taken."

JAMES FOX
NEW YORK FBI CHIEF

NEW YORK — A man described as a follower of a radical Muslim cleric was arrested Thursday in last week's World Trade Center bombing when he coolly tried a third time to reclaim a rental deposit on the van determined to have housed the bomb.

Other suspects were being sought in what prosecutor Gilmore Childres called "the single most destructive act of terrorism ever committed on America soil." The motive remained unclear.

"This investigation clearly is not finished, but a large first step has been taken," James Fox, FBI chief in New York, said at a news briefing Thursday night.

Mohammed A. Salameh, 25, was charged with aiding and abetting the bombing and a fire that followed, and with transportation of explosives across state lines. The Jersey City, N.J., resident was ordered held without bail and faces life in prison if convicted.

The arrest was a sudden, major break in the most notorious U.S. bombing in years. Just a day earlier, the FBI had said it could take months to crack the case.

The van Salameh rented was the one that carried the bomb, the FBI said in an affidavit filed with the court. Charred fragments of the van — including an axle with a traceable identification number — were recovered at the blast site.

The affidavit also said a search of a Jersey City apartment with a bomb-sniffing dog turned up bomb-making equipment including wiring and manuals on circuitry and electromagnetic devices. On the rental agreement Salameh had given the phone number for that apartment; it wasn't immediately clear whether Salameh lived there.

Salameh, in federal court in New York City on Thursday night, appeared calm and relaxed as an interpreter read the charges to him in Arabic. The bearded man nodded to his attorney but didn't appear to speak. The court-appointed defense lawyer, Robert Precht, asked for $5-million bail.

Papers that the suspect presented the rental agency several days ago were covered with nitrates, a government source, speaking on condition of anonymity, told the Associated Press. Nitrates are found in some explosives; traces of nitrates were found at the blast site.

Friday's blast in a garage beneath the twin towers killed five people, injured more than 1,000, left one missing and sent fear through the nation's largest city. It caused a crater four stories deep. The 110-story towers — the world's second-tallest buildings, home to hundreds of businesses more than 50,000 workers — aren't expected to reopen for a month.

One law enforcement source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Thursday the attack could have been in retaliation for the Persian Gulf War. The bombing came on the second anniversary of the U.S. ouster of Iraq's army from Kuwait. But a Clinton administration source said evidence of Mideast terrorist involvement was "iffy."

The arrest came after an army of investigators spent the past week combing through piles of rubble at the blast site, fielding thousands of phone calls and pursuing scores of leads. Detectives systematically checked garage payment stubs and viewed videotapes of entering vehicles.

The suspect had rented the van from a Ryder truck agent in Jersey City on Feb. 23 and returned less than two hours after the explosion Friday afternoon to say it had been stolen from him in Jersey City, said Paul Mascitelli, owner of a car dealership that shares an office with the Ryder agent.

The man wanted his $400 cash deposit back but was told he would need a police report of the theft, Mascitelli said. He said the suspect returned Monday without the police report and again was turned away.

On Thursday morning, the man called

Alcohol policies may change soon

Move would give container size option to hall boards

MARC JONES
Collegian

Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls is considering changes to its alcohol policy after Marlatt Hall's Yakfest last Saturday night.

The present policy allows only 3.2 percent cereal malt beverage beer in containers of one quart or smaller.

The policy change being considered is to allow each hall's governing board the authority to approve the use of larger containers at hall functions, Tim Stevens, KSUARH president, said.

Last Saturday's Yakfest at Marlatt was allowed to have kegs after organizers of the event asked KSUARH for permission.

"We asked for an amendment to say kegs can be used at a party if it's approved by the respective hall's (governing board)," John Ryan, an organizer of Yakfest said.

KSUARH did not make the requested amendment but did allow an exception for the dance.

"We made the exception for Marlatt. Since then, other halls have talked to me and want to do it as well," Stevens said.

KSUARH is forming a committee with representation from each hall to consider a new policy, iron out problems and make recommendations to the general body, Stevens said.

However, confusion exists over the process of making changes.

There was confusion over whether the alcohol policy was an amendment to the KSUARH Constitution or a free-standing policy, Stevens said.

To answer the question, the KSUARH judicial board met in a closed session last night.

Trevor Brown, KSUARH chief justice, said the judicial board was meeting to determine if the alcohol policy is a policy or an amendment, and to clarify the differences between policy and amendments.

The board decided that the alcohol policy is a policy separate from the constitution.

"Policies are separate from the constitution but have equal weight of the law," Brown said.

The judicial board will make a recommendation to the KSUARH general body in a meeting Monday night.

The recommendation will be to add an article to the constitution that will define policies and establish a procedure to change them, Brown said.

There were questions as how to approach changing the policy, Stevens said.

Any changes to the alcohol policy will be checked by the University attorney to make certain there are no violations of state law and that it follows SGA and University policies, he said.

Schrum nomination withdrawn

Manhattan regent nominee faced opposition from GOP-controlled Senate

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The Senate Democratic leader said Ruth Schrum, whose nomination to the Kansas Board of Regents was withdrawn Thursday, had the full support of Democrats but lost the Republicans.

Gov. Joan Finney withdrew Schrum's nomination because of anticipated resistance in the GOP-controlled Senate. The Senate Education Committee never had a hearing on Schrum's confirmation to the board, which oversees six state universities.

"I think it's very sad that the confirmation process did not provide her with an opportunity for a hearing," said Minority Leader

Jerry Karr of Emporia. He said all of the 13 Democrats in the Senate supported her confirmation.

Schrum was not available for comment. Calls made to her home in Manhattan were not returned.

Mary Holladay, the governor's daughter and chief of staff, said the governor did not want to become embroiled in a nomination fight in the Senate.

"The governor is a longtime friend of Schrum, and she is well qualified for the board," Holladay said. "After visiting with Senate leadership, the governor was convinced it was going to be difficult to get her confirmed."

Republican opposition to Schrum's appointment had been quietly growing for several weeks.

"From a realistic standpoint, it's not a battle the governor wanted to take on," Holladay said. "She has been working very, very hard to cooperate with the Legislature."

Finney will immediately begin a search for a replacement for Schrum, Holladay said, but it is unlikely another appointee will be named in time to get the person confirmed by the Senate during the current session.

"She feels very badly because of her friendship with Ruth and because she feels she's qualified," Holladay said.

Schrum holds bachelor's and master's degrees from K-State.

"I think it is unlikely she would have been confirmed," said Sen. Dave Kerr, R-Hutchinson, chairman of the education committee. "Historically, the regents have been people of exceptional accomplishment." Kerr said he would have scheduled a hearing had the nomination not been withdrawn.

"There were a number of factors, which together convinced senators that they would not be able to confirm," Kerr said.

Sen. Doug Walker, D-Osawatomie, ranking minority member on the committee, said the whole thing was "purely political." Walker said Senate Republicans were prepared to reject her nomination because she is a Democratic Party activist and because she was a longtime member of the Kansas National Education Association, the state's largest teachers' union.

"I think she was treated pretty shoddily by the committee," Walker said. "Most people at least

STUDENT SENATE

Senators debate campaign issues

MICHELLE ROGERS
Collegian

After much debate about the changes in campaign and campaign expenditure regulations, the bill was returned to the elections committee for further improvements in Thursday's Student Senate meeting.

"It's too confusing," Amy Smith, sophomore in pre-professional secondary education and education senator, said about the proposed bill.

The bill will again be presented to Senate as two separate bills in a special meeting called by President Jackie McClaskey at 7 p.m. this Tuesday.

In new business, the approval of the Business Administration Association constitutional revision passed by unanimous consent.

This bill approves an extensive revision of the former Business Administration Council Constitution, which lacked clarity, reason, vision and overall effectiveness, according to Travis Brock, junior in business and business senator and Becky Bryan, senior in finance and business senator, co-authors of the bill.

Also passed in new business was an advance to International Coordinating Council from the Student Governing Association Foundation account.

This bill will allow ICC to have funds in the amount of $950 to reimburse groups as soon as possible after the 1993 King's Potluck Dinner during International Week.

This money will be taken from the SGA Student Projects Account Fund at the KSU Foundation and reimbursed by ICC by June 30.

In special orders, a bill addressing the reapportionment of Senate was passed by unanimous consent.

Currently, the SGA Constitution reads that Senate have "one member for each 300 full-time students and one member for each 600 part-time students or a major fraction thereof in each college or school."

The elections will be apportioned among the colleges and schools as follows: five senators from the College of Agriculture, two from architecture and design, 19 from arts and sciences, eight from business administration, six from education, four from human ecology, six from graduate school and one from the College of Veterinary Medicine.

Held for a second reading were two bills concerned with the SGA constitutional revision, which addresses the approval and veto of bills and resolutions, and the SGA by-laws revision for Senate Standing committees.

Ahearn to feature human pretzels at Twistermania

LYNN ANDERSON
Collegian

We've heard of Twisted Sister, a two-flavor ice cream twist, and Chubby Checker doing the "Twist," but what is Twistermania?

Seventy-five Twisterboards, identical to the Milton Bradley game, will be joined together into one big Twister mat, as Theta Xi and Alpha Chi Omega put on the first "Twistermania" fundraiser.

The connecting of body parts to colored dots will begin at 3 p.m. on March 7, with the entire game running about two hours, Jeff Laubhan, sophomore in business administration and Theta Xi philanthropy chairman, said.

"The idea originated in our national fall conference," Laubhan said. "We've never done it before, but I guess in some places it was in the Guinness Book. It should be very social and a good way to meet members of the opposite sex."

Entry fees are $35, and sorority, fraternity and residence hall members can participate. Once an organization is entered, an unlimited number of players can represent it, Laubhan said.

"Initially it was just greeks, but it ended up being with the dorms allowed to participate as well," Laubhan said. "We just weren't getting a good response from greeks."

While entrants consist of one fraternity, four sororities, and one residence hall, Laubhan said he expects 380 people to begin the first twisting round.

"We should fill up most of Ahearn, considering each of the 75 mats are 5 feet by 5 feet," Laubhan said.

With sponsorships running $30 a piece and Milton Bradley donating 25 of the Twisterboards, Laubhan said money spent was minimal.

"The costs for this event are very little," Laubhan said. "And $35 is a relatively cheap entry fee. We did this to try to encourage the idea that everyone can participate."

T-shirts for the philanthropy sell for $8.50, which when added to the entry fees totals about $500, Laubhan said.

The money will be donated to Big Brothers/Big Sisters, which is Alpha Chi's annual charity.

"We wanted to give locally to actually see results," Laubhan said. "Instead of, say, mailing a check to New York and never seeing any results."

He said those who withstand the competition will get prizes. The winners will receive cash prizes, and other prizes such as pizzas will be given to the top 10 finalists.

Laubhan said participants must be clever to be successful twisters.

"I've heard the whole goal is to get to the center," Laubhan said. "A winner would be someone with remotely enough intelligence to plan ahead and not get eliminated."

Allison Mott, senior in electrical engineering and twister participant, said she has another tactic in mind.

"I'm going to get the opponent off-balance by secretly nudging them while the judges aren't looking," Mott said.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Parking Hell in the Ville

THE ISSUE

Aggieville parking leaves much to be desired.

WE SUGGEST

Changing existing laws would benefit both customers and businesses of Aggieville.

Being the oldest business district in Kansas, one would think Aggieville would do anything to keep customers in its establishments — not drive them away.

Patrons to the four-block area must move their vehicles within a two- to three-hour period to avoid parking tickets. Multiple tickets on a vehicle will be towed away at the owner's expense.

Not only does this hurt the vehicle owners, who must park a block or two from Aggieville, but the businesses themselves — particularly on the weekends and large events that bring in visitors and K-State alumni to town — as clients spend more time driving than in their establishment.

An argument for the two- to three-hour span is that it would allow those looking for parking spots to get spaces. But, with only the limited amount of parking available in Aggieville, customers go through the musical chairs of leaving a business then driving around, finding spots near another business.

The Aggieville Business Association should ask the Manhattan City Commission to change the limits, at least on weekends, or to lengthen the parking time to help their customers and themselves.

Doing time in the antibiotics line

It's a leper colony: March 3, 1993, Lafene Health Center.

We're all crowded into the lobby, waiting for our names to be announced over the static P. A. Waiting for our doctors. Waiting for our drugs.

The cold has been hitting campus big time. Students are wandering to classes, spitting phlegm and waiting it out.

I am one of the many. I struggle in Lafene, reading anything I can get my hands on because I know illness is a placebo for laziness.

Everyone is wheezing or coughing. Even the old nurse behind the counter looks at me red-eyed and frazzled.

"Is this your first trip to Lafene?" she asks me.

No, I've been here before, I let her know. I look around me. All these people.

I try to keep busy.

In high school, my friends and I would park in front of liquor stores and guess what people would buy. By judging their clothes, you could get a good estimation.

Colt 45. Corona. Old Crow.

TOM LISTER

Here at the clinic, it's a little harder to tell. Sure, most people have the cold, but mixed in with them are a few people with real problems: psychological counseling, strep throat, yeast infections. Genital warts.

I wince, walk up to grab another tissue, and hear my name announced in metallic P.A. garb.

They've got nifty, colored lines to let you know where to go at the clinic. Mine is orange. I follow it to a station where a kind nurse meets me.

Still trying to stay busy, I interrogate her while she prods me with thermometers and blood pressure readings. Yes, she's just getting over a cold, she tells me. Yes, quite a few have been sick.

She leaves. I snag a stethoscope off the door and listen to my heart for a while. It's a bit like a tune from the latest Peter Gabriel album. I rifle through every drawer in the office and twist the lamp in impossible directions.

The doctor doesn't arrive for a while. I think of what it'll be like if I stay sick. I'll miss school and work. I'll be an unemployed drop-out.

In six months, I will be arrested at Red Bud Estates for check fraud.

When the doctor does arrive, I remember that most doctors look more unhealthy than the patients. No offense.

Like any good doctor, he sticks this metal thing in my ears and nose and peeks into the back of my throat. And then, like a really good doctor, he signs me up for drugs.

Having a cold doesn't get you very good drugs. Having personal problems does. I think about running out of the room teary-eyed up to second floor counseling and breaking down for lithium.

I picture myself chasing a mysterious lithium tablet with a quart of Old Milwaukee.

I chicken out and leave with a prescription for antibiotics, I think. The guys at the pharmacy are cool. One of them lets me know he doesn't like Rush Limbaugh. The other told me he was from Cuba.

He told me about a few tobacco plants I shouldn't visit.

There is no sympathy for being sick when you are older. Never again will you get to wander around the house in jammies with the feet on them.

You look pathetic as a sick adult. You leave lung cookies in the shower and grow stubble.

As evening approaches, I remember I have a column to write. I gotta stay busy. The only way to get better, I realize, is to hit myself with every over-the-counter drug known to man.

Nasal spray— worse than crack — one shot for each nostril. NyQuil is great, too. Although it's only 25 percent alcohol (the equivalent of schnapps), it'll knock you out.

I keep the medicine coming. Hey, if it worked for Coleridge, I might as well give it a shot.

Give Calvin and the crossword a break

Editor,

I give up. Everyday, when I open my Collegian, I find the entire "Essentials" section in a mess. One day, the comics are at the top of the page, and then the next day they are at the bottom. Not only do the comics move around, but they don't even run in order. There was a two week period where "Calvin and Hobbes" was run backwards in sequence.

If you have ever bothered to look at the cartoon, you would have noticed numbers in one of the boxes. These numbers represent the date the cartoon is to run. If these numbers match with the numbers at the top of the page, congratulations — you have the right comic strip for the day. While I'm at it, why don't you get some real comic strips (i.e. Garfield, Peanuts, Shoe) like you have had before.

There is also the issue of the crossword puzzle. Leave it alone. The crossword moves around the page more than the comics. If you have ever tried to do the crossword, you find that you need a degree in geometry in order to fold the paper. Put the crossword and Cryptopipe in a corner and let it stay there peacefully. It's a bitch folding the paper 10 different ways.

► BEAUTY PAGEANTS

Homogeneous idea right on the mark

Editor,

Congratulations to the Collegian Editorial Board for focusing on a major issue, "Pageants Set Wrong Standard." They said, "To use physical beauty, highlighted beneath the cut of an evening gown or swimsuit, as a criteria for judging one person against another is beyond reprehensible — it's insulting." To think that in our politically correct society we would continue to place women (even at their own initiative) in situations where judges would make qualitative assessments of beauty is indeed degrading and must be stopped.

In this era of increasing sexual neutrality the pageants should not be gender-biased but open to women and men. While we're at it, let's make sure that all contestants wear the same unisex outfit or, better yet, be draped in a white sheet with a hole for one's head to poke through with the head shaven, of course, so the judges can't show any gender bias.

Now on what will they judge the contestants? Of course, let's test their knowledge on a wide range of subjects to ascertain intellectual capacity and further assess their poise as they respond.

Now you have it — a pageant worth winning and seeing. It should have huge appeal.

Marlatt Hall bash had a clean slate, pal

Editor,

Being a staff member of Marlatt Hall as well as creator of Yakfest, I would first like to thank all the people who helped make the party a success, including my associate John Ryan. We spent a great deal of time preparing for this party, and I would like to say that it was a great success and feel anyone that attended would agree.

Next, let me address Jeremy Unruh's letter to the editor in the March 4 Collegian.

The party did not encourage anyone to drink until they got drunk. However, it did encourage people to have fun, and that is what they did. No one was drunk or bad enough to be stumbling around.

Just so everyone knows, this was not intended to recruit people for Marlatt Hall. It was a party given by the students, for the students, and approved by the students.

In Jeremy's letter, he accused the administration of changing the alcohol policies for the greek houses. Just a little note: The decision was made by the IFC and Panhellenic Council.

Also, you should contact the Kansas Board of Regents in regard to serving alcohol in Ahearn Field House. The administration does not handle that.

Again, the party was a lot of fun and went very well. The students are the ones who had the party as well as approved the party. Chuck Werring and Loleta Sump are not a factor here.

Just a little advice: Make sure you know the details and the people who are responsible for certain events before criticizing them.

Alumni poor athletic supporters of Cats

Editor,

Yes, this is yet another "lack of support" letter, but this time it is focused on a specific group of people: the alumni and faculty that sit across from the student section.

You, the alumni and faculty, are the forefathers of the K-State tradition and pride. You are the people who filled the student section of years past and cheered with the same enthusiasm as the student section of today.

What happened to that K-State pride and enthusiasm? I questioned your school spirit long before the game against Missouri. But you left no doubt in my mind when I saw you leaving without even waiting to show your appreciation as Coach Dana Altman took our hard-working seniors out of the game for the final time in Bramlage Coliseum.

Granted, K-State support has dwindled this year, but you, faculty and alumni, are the backbone of the K-State tradition. What could possibly be more important than supporting the Cats? If it was important to buy tickets, then it should be important to come and stay for the game.

Well, basketball season might be over at Bramlage, but the Cats still have quite a few games left. They will be back next year and years to come. So come on alumni and faculty, be the leaders that you claim to be. Show your Purple Pride and support the Cats.

Don't just blame Capitol Hill

Democracy works because it is responsive to the demands of the citizens.

The problems of this nation stem from each of its citizens

"The besetting sin of Democrats is complacency." — John Strachey

Tighten your shorts, fellow pilgrims. We're about to be taken for yet another ride. During the recent presidential campaign, we got a nonstop torrent of rhetoric explaining that the reason why our government has failed to respond to the difficult problems facing America is that it has become caught up in the web of special interests and lobbyists. Politicians from President Clinton to Ross Perot promised to ride in on their white horses, slay the evil lobbyists and cut out massive amounts of financial waste.

Somehow, the real source of gridlock in government is supposed to be these overpaid and suspiciously motivated professional lobbyists, and the fact that the country has factionalized into special interest groups specializing in the politics of victimization.

Well, the last time I checked the Congressional Record, none of these people had their names registered on any legislative voting. The simple fact is, the real reason the government seems not to accomplish anything constructive is that the majority of Americans have ceased making such a demand of our politicians in Washington.

The truth is that the right to petition the government is a right guaranteed under the Constitution. Democracy works because it is responsive to the demands of its citizens. In a heterogeneous democracy like ours, the only way to make one's needs heard is to shout. But even in a country as wealthy as ours, there is not enough national treasure to satisfy everyone's demands. So we ask our politicians to make difficult, informed decisions as to how best to satisfy these needs in the best interests of the country as a whole.

SHAWN WOODFORD

It is most amusing to listen to the complaints of our national politicians about having to deal with the "politics of Washington, D.C." What I want to know is, what other way is there of settling the competing demands of the electorate?

Perhaps Americans are willing to give up their freedoms in return for a benevolent dictator who will be free of the need to respond to public opinion and can run the government to its maximum efficiency. A frightened democracy legitimately electing a ruthless despot is not without precedent in modern history.

Since I don't think that even the most disgusted among us is willing to junk our messy democratic process for an enlightened despot (H. Ross Perot notwithstanding), the question remains. How can we get our government to respond effectively to the grave problems that face our country? Well, the answer is rather simple actually. For a democracy to work, all members of the electorate have to be well informed on the issues, so that they can know when their elected representatives start placing their own desire to be re-elected above the good of the country.

After all, politicians are human, too. It would be too much to ask of all of them to be Abraham Lincoln or Thomas Jefferson. No, the time has come for us to stop whining about the politicians, who are whining about the lobbyists and special-interest groups.

If we want our government to work, then every individual who is angry about gridlock needs to get out and participate in the democratic process, ensuring that the politicians understand that they need to serve our interests and not their own. We have dodged responsibility for our own problems long enough. It isn't our politicians who are failing us. We are failing ourselves.

BY RICHARD ANDRADE

OK, who's been feeding my horse beer again?

James Toto, 23, wanted to propose to his lady love in a very special, very stupid way.

Clad in heavy medieval armor from head to toe, with a red cape and long sword, Toto mounted his horse and prepared to ride to the elementary school to pop the question to his fiancé — a fourth-grade teacher, not a student.

His horse, apparently jealous of the couple, had different plans, throwing Toto great distances every time he attempted to ride.

Eventually, Toto crossed the great romantic kingdom of East Windsor, New Jersey, with only minor injuries (lacerated hand, slight concussion and blurred vision) and crossed the moat/highway into the realm of the Walter C. Black School.

With a leather pouch around his neck containing a diamond engagement ring, Toto somehow got his horse in the school without incident and made it to his love's classroom. There, dancing on the edge of unconsciousness, he asked Athena Katsifis, 24, to marry him.

She said yes.

Then he asked her to call an ambulance. Quickly.

Dear Student Senate, What about more free sex for K-Staters?

Love, Weekend

In these days of the horrible, horrible K-State fan apathy and the re-emergence of those horrible, horrible Birkenstock things (we hoped that they'd go away during the winter but they're back, looking only slightly more ridiculous) it's heartwarming to see the youth of America pulling themselves up by their bootstraps for no-holds-barred sex.

Excerpts from a flyer titled "Youth of Seattle Demand SEX" posted by the Youth Decade Campaign, as reported in the March issue of Harper's magazine:

"Teenage suicide is at an all-time high ... The city council has an obligation to the youth of Seattle. Much of the neurosis of today's youth is caused by unnecessary anxiety due to lack of a decent sex life. ... the Youth Decade Campaign demands that the city provide Seattle's youth with free prostitutes. Youth who are perceived as being physically attractive by capitalist society's false value system hold an unfair monopoly on sex partners ... Thus we demand free and decent sex for all youth, regardless of race, gender, class, or physical attractiveness. Equal sex for youth by youth! Free sex for ALL youth!"

Needless to say, we agree wholeheartedly.

At first we thought it was Jimmy Dean Sausage Day

When we heard that today was Dean Stockwell's birthday, we almost flat-out fainted. Imagine the chance to write a flattering tribute to the guy who starred in the Disney opuses "Blackbeard's Ghost" and "Herbie Goes to Monte Carlo."

After hours of frustrated library research, what do we find? We find that we confused actor Dean Stockwell for actor Dean Jones. It isn't Dean Jones' birthday. Oh so embarrassing.

So we grudgingly say happy birthday to what's-his-name, that Stockwell guy. He's an actor born on this day in 1936. As a child, he starred in "Abbot and Costello in Hollywood," which is a badge of courage if there ever was one. Now he's the one that "Quantum Leap" shows the hologram guy who keeps saying things like, "Sam, Ziggy says there's a 98.1 percent chance that your pants will explode."

But, with Dean Jones on one side and Dean Stockwell on the other, who ya gonna go with? Of course, you give this Stockwell character the boot. But he did sing "Candy Colored Clown" in David Lynch's "Blue Velvet" and it is his birthday.

So, to cheer us up, we must announce today is Boys' Day in Japan, the feast days of St. Phocas of Antioch and St. Dean Jones of the Magic Kingdom, the anniversaries of the signing of the Treaty of Rennes in 1432, the Boston Massacre in 1770, and the famous "Iron Curtain" speech given by Winston Churchill at Westminster College in Fulton, Mo., in 1946.

Not that this so-called "speech" had anything on Dean Jones' Academy Award acceptance speech (for "That Darn Cat" in 1968) in which he made note of the tremendous amounts of rope we would have if only marijuana were legalized. Unfortunately, Jones did not win the Oscar and never gave the speech.

Indeed, a nation mourned.

Is Anybody Out There?

UFOs, alien beings, abductions ... is any of it true?

The classified ad reads:

"ALIEN AND ASTRAL IMPLANTS act as control mechanisms and lead to physical and emotional problems. 190 million people have them! We remove implants, cords, possessions, (and even mothers!)." ."

The name below the ad was Dr. Davis, Columbus, New Mexico, no first name given.

I call him.

Most calls to UFO experts on this story went like this: Ring. Ring. Hello? Hello, my name's David Frese, I'm a reporter with ...

>Click<

Dr. Davis answers. He does not hang up.

I ask what he does.

"Aliens are putting implants in humans as a means of control," he says, merely a voice over the phone. "I have the ability to remove them."

At this point, it would be easy to snicker. To let Personal Feelings get in the way of Objectivity. It would be easy to tell you it becomes hard to believe; most people would tell you this.

An education from a College of Technical and Applied Sciences sometimes gets in the way of imagination.

Some may think to themselves, "I have never seen an alien, therefore aliens must not exist," though many have never seen a baby pigeon either.

"Up in Frisco," Dr. Davis says, "There was a man who sent me a picture, and I could see that the implants formed a helmet around his head. It took several months for me to get rid of them."

Dr. Davis emotes sincerity, belief, candor. An instinct to laugh in Kansas is replaced with an impulse to listen to New Mexico.

"I recently cleared two women who each had two or three in their backs," he says. "I also manufacture a board that wards the implants off. And I tell them there's no guarantee the implants will stay away unless they buy the board. If they don't, they're on their own."

Have you ever been to the Planetarium in Cardwell Hall?

It is a big room. Dark, with blue carpet.

Have you ever asked a scientist you don't know if they believe there is life in outer space?

"It's not really a science," says Barry Adams, director of laboratories in physics.

"Astronomers and people who work with things 'out there,' either subscribe to the proposition that there is life out there or they don't. There is no middle ground," Adams says. "I'd be in the camp that believes there is life out there."

First he explains the question should not be "Does life exist in outer space?" but, "Where does life exist in outer space?"

Second, he explains Drake's Equation — $N = R \cdot f(p) \cdot n(e) \cdot f(l) \cdot f(c) \cdot L$.

This reporter is no math whiz, but I shall try to cipher forthwith.

Say there are 100 billion stars in our galaxy. Then say that there are 100 billion galaxies in the universe. Multiply them together and you get stars numbering around 10 to the twenty-second power, or 10 hextrillion stars, or a one followed by twenty-two zeroes.

Further, with new technologies of the Hubble Telescope, and the latest in optical and radio telescope technologies, it is now rather accepted that there are many stars out there with planets.

Now, if it is a billion-to-one chance that there is life in any given solar system, it follows that there are at least 100 billion planets with life in the universe. If my math's wrong, you still get the idea.

"Based upon that," surmises Adams. "I would say that the probability for life out there is highly likely."

But is that life on the order of amoeba, humans or wookiee.

Said Adams, "Here's the problem: If you accept the Big Bang Theory, then the universe is roughly 15 billion years old. Our solar system and the Earth is four billion years old."

"We're newcomers to the universe," he said. "Most of the life out there ought to be more advanced technologically, socially and culturally."

The other edge of the sword is if there are highly advanced civilizations "out there" why haven't they contacted us?

Sappy and predictable, "Forever Young" is worth seeing if you're a pushover for a love story.

This tale of forever love begins in 1939 between a dare-devil test pilot, Danny, played by Mel Gibson and his long-time girlfriend, Helen, played by Isabel Glasser. Danny wants to ask Helen to marry him, but he waits too long as she is seriously hurt in an accident.

Danny can't deal with the possibility of Helen's death. So, he pleads with his best friend Harry, played by George (Norm!) Wendt, to let him be a subject in one of his friend's experiments, which is freezing living beings for certain time periods.

Danny doesn't want to see Helen die, and he thinks that freezing his body for a year will be an easy way to forget her.

But, of course, the experiment fails, and Danny is frozen for not one, but 40 years. It's not until two unsuspecting children, Nat and Felix, are playing in a military warehouse and discover the vessel that holds him. They accidentally open the vessel, and Danny is freed from his hibernation. The children flee the warehouse, not believing what they found, and Danny is left alone to discover when and where he is.

When he fails to convince the military leaders what has happened to him, Danny eventually finds the two children and hides out in Nat's tree house.

SHOW TIMES

■ "Forever Young" will show at 7 and 9:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday and at 7 p.m. Sunday in K-State Union Forum Hall. Admission is $1.75.

The military finally realizes the process Danny experienced was part of a groundbreaking cryogenics experiment and starts to search for him.

This is a fluff movie for Gibson, who has been in more substantial roles, but he looks appropriately sorrowful as he yearns for his girlfriend, whom he thinks is dead. Some people may be happy to know Gibson also fulfills his basic requirement for any film, showing his naked backside.

A more shining character is 10-year-old Nat, played by Elijah Wood. He displays perfect wide-eyed awe and innocence as his character discovers Danny is a pilot, Nat's ultimate dream. Wood is a promising actor, who should continue making his mark in film.

It is not the deepest statement about undying love, but go see it if you're in a sappy, sentimental mood.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Cats looking to spoil Clones' 15-0 home mark

SCOTT ABEL

Collegian

In a normal year, a 7-6 Big Eight record would probably have the K-State Wildcats already making plans for the NCAA tournament.

However, this season's Big Eight race has been anything but normal. The Cats will close out their regular conference season against the Iowa State Cyclones at 3 p.m. Saturday in Ames with very little decided.

With one weekend to play, K-State is in a four-team logjam for third place. Only the first- and eighth-place seeds have been nailed down for the conference tournament.

With a win at Ames, the Wildcats might snag a second seed in the Big Eight tournament and earn an NCAA tournament bid.

Lose, and the Cats could end up as a sixth seed, and a trip to the Big Dance might hinge on a first-round win in Kansas City.

"I think eight wins would guarantee us a place," head coach Dana Altman said. "That's definitely our goal."

But to log that eighth conference win, the Cats will have to do it against the Big Eight's resident Jekyll and Hyde team.

Iowa State hasn't been successful on the road. Since the 1987-88 season, Iowa State has won only seven of 35 Big Eight road games, a .167 percentage.

But back in the friendly confines of Hilton Coliseum, the Cyclones have been unbeatable.

"They're rejuvenated at home," center Deryl Cunningham said, who had seven points and eight rebounds in the Cats' overtime win over the Cyclones last month.

"They play like a Top-10 team — nothing's going to stop them. They know they have that extra confidence that they don't have on the road," he said.

Iowa State's home court winning streak is now at 16 games, the fifth-longest in the nation. The Cyclones are 15-0 in Ames this season.

Hilton's magic worked well against the Cats last year. K-State grabbed a 23-14 lead midway through the first half, but the Cyclones drilled 16 of their 21 shots in the second to bury the Cats, 85-59.

"I think Iowa State plays with a lot of emotion, with a lot of enthusiasm there because of their crowd," Altman said.

"I think it's Iowa State's personality. I don't think teams play bad there. I think Iowa State plays very well there."

But history has favored K-State in the past. The Wildcats hold a 42-33 edge in games played in Ames, including a conference-best 12-9 record in Hilton.

Altman said the Cats' major concern going into Saturday's match-up is the strength of the Cyclones' back-court.

"The first thing about Iowa State that always scares me is (Ron) Bayless and

Thigpen is third in the Big Eight in scoring averages with 18 points a game.

"For us to win at Hilton, we're going to have to play one of our best on-the-road games this year," forward Aaron Collier said.

"For us to beat them, we really need to crash and dominate the rebounds. If we dominate the boards and play strong, aggressive defense, we've got a strong chance."

And if the Cyclones go 16-0 at home this season, the Cats will finish seven conference wins — a number that may not get them an invitation to the NCAA tournament.

"I'll just play hard, try to get the next one," Cunningham said. "So we can say in the end — whether we're in or not — that we played hard and tried to get in."

"We just need to try to keep getting victories, wins, victories, wins, and let them decide that."

Is 7 victories enough to go to the Dance?

STEVEN ROCK

Collegian

Is seven enough?

With K-State heading to Iowa State's Hilton Coliseum — where the Cyclones are 15-0 this season — the Wildcats are faced with a precarious question: Will a 7-7 record be good enough to get them into the NCAA Tournament?

"I think we deserve to be in the tournament now," said Wildcat coach Dana Altman after his team beat Missouri 78-67 Tuesday. "I thought seven wins was what we needed."

With K-State's power ranking still nestled in the 60s — 64, to be exact — the Cats still need another win before they can be assured of a tournament berth.

But a look at the tournament's history may give K-State a reason to be optimistic.

■ Last season, Iowa State was sixth in the Big Eight with a 5-9 record and went to the tournament.

■ Oklahoma State had a 15-12 overall record in the 1989-90 season. One of those wins was against a non-Division I team. In the Big Eight, the Cowboys were tied for fourth with a 7-7 record — and went to the Big Dance.

■ In 1988-89, the Cowboys finished the conference season in fourth place with a 7-7 mark. Their overall record was just 16-11, but they got a tournament bid.

■ Missouri had just 15 wins against Division I teams in 1984-85 and finished third in the Big Eight. The Tigers were invited.

In fact, since the NCAA Tournament expanded to 64 teams, every Big Eight team that finished with at least a share of fourth place and won 17 Division I games has gone to the tournament.

And every conference team that has finished .500 or better in the Big Eight and had been ranked at one time in the season has gone to the tournament as well.

The Cats are tied for third in the Big Eight with 17 overall wins — all of them against Division I teams. They were ranked No. 23 on Feb. 8.

But none of the teams listed had a ranking as low as 64. Granted, K-State's mark doesn't include the Missouri game, but considering that the Tigers are at No. 71, it may not help.

In fact, K-State has a lower power ranking than any of the other teams tied for third: Oklahoma (16), Iowa State (20) and Nebraska (39).

Realistically, K-State could have the same record that other teams have in conference play, but watch helplessly as the other teams go to the tournament.

"Not many things are fair," Altman said. "But that's a couple of weeks down the road, and I'm not sure what's going to happen."

"We're going to go to Iowa State, play the best we can. We're going to go to the Big Eight tournament, play the best we can. And hopefully, things will fall into place."

And senior Vincent Jackson — who has never gone to the tournament — said he knows what will answer any questions.

"We need to win the Iowa State game," he said. "I want to go as much as anybody."

"I don't feel comfortable. I want another Big Eight win."

OSU pounds Oral Roberts, 114-85

ASSOCIATED PRESS

STILLWATER, Okla. — It wasn't hard to tell which team had won by 45 the last time Oklahoma State and Oral Roberts met.

No. 19 Oklahoma State, a 90-45 winner over the Titans earlier this year, needed career nights from three players and a 26-2 run in the final six minutes Thursday night to shake off Oral Roberts, 114-85.

"I have been in many strange games in all the years I've coached, and this would have to be in at least the top 12," Oklahoma State coach Eddie Sutton said.

Fred Burley scored 35 points, Brooks Thompson had 33 and Bryant Reeves added 31 — all career highs — for the Cowboys (19-6). It marked the first time in school history Oklahoma State had more than one player score 30 points in a game.

It also was the most points scored by a Sutton-coached team. The previous high was 111 against Rice in 1976 when he was at Arkansas.

"I've only had a few players through the years score 30," said Sutton, in his 23rd year as a major-college coach. "I've never had two of them score 30 in the same game. Here we have three guys score 30-plus — 99 points by three players? That's strange. It is the way we coach the game."

The Cowboys, who came in averaging 77.5 points per game, tied a school record by scoring 71 points in the second half.

They shot 80 percent — 24 of 30 — in the second half, including one stretch in which they made 14 straight field goals.

"This has been indicative," said outgoing coach Ken Trickey. "All of a sudden it's fairly close, then the next thing you know we're out of it."

Oral Roberts finished its season 5-22, the worst record in the school's 28-year history. Trickey, who agreed last month to resign, ends his career with a record of 363-261 in 22 seasons, 11 of those in two stints at ORU.

Burley scored eight points during a 14-2 run early in the second half that gave the Cowboys a seemingly comfortable 57-47 lead. But Matt Crain, who scored 21, hit a pair of three-pointers in helping the Titans rally to tie the score at 64.

Oklahoma State broke out to an 80-72 lead later on, but again the Titans rallied and got within 88-83. Then Thompson, who scored 26 points in the second half, hit a three-pointer to begin the Cowboys' late surge.

Ray Thompson scored 23 and Kenny Bohanon had 21 for the Titans, who gave up 100 or more points for the 13th time this season.

Oklahoma State played without starting guard Randy Rutherford, who has an injured ankle, and backup forward Von Bennett, who was in a minor auto accident early Thursday morning.

Oklahoma State's last regular season game will be Saturday afternoon against Kansas in Stillwater, Okla.

Baseball Cats post 11-3 victory in home opener

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Mike Clark, K-State head coach, points to the plate in the second inning of Thursday night's game against Northern Iowa. Clark was upset because a Wildcat base-runner was called out on a close play at the plate. Northern Iowa already had three runs at the time, but K-State came back and won, 11-3.

Weather delays first pitch for nearly 2 hours

BRIAN ANDERSON

K-State showed its ability to knock the ball around Thursday night as the Cats had 17 hits — including four doubles — in their home-opening 11-3 win over 0-1 Northern Iowa at Frank Myers Field.

The game, which was originally slated for 3 p.m., didn't start until 4:45.

The Cats, off to a 1-1 start, got only one runner across the plate and two hits in its 10-1 season-opening loss Feb. 21 at Arkansas.

Coach Mike Clark said he was pleased with the play of his club.

"We were a lot more aggressive up on the plate," he said. "We did extra hitting with the kids. The pitchers were throwing live to them in the Brandeberry indoor facility, which is got to be like Nolan Ryan throwing at them with the lights in there."

"I thought we responded well up and down the line-up."

And Clark said he was especially delighted with the team's base running.

"I thought we were aggressive," he said. "We ran ourselves out of some plays, but we also created some plays. We wanted to be aggressive on the base paths."

An example of K-State's aggressive running came in the sixth inning, which produced four runs.

Scott McFall started the inning by beating out an infield bunt. After Todd Petering moved McFall to second base on a sacrifice bunt, Jamey Stellino beat out a throw from Panther shortstop Kevin Bower and wound up on first.

Tim Decker got hit by a pitcher, and Brian Culp capitalized with a two-run double, bringing in McFall and Stellino.

Brian Morrow, the next batter, brought in Decker and Culp but got thrown out at second base trying to stretch a single into a double.

Robert Merriman got his first win as a Cat by pitching six innings and allowing three earned runs — all in the first inning.

"His adrenaline was overflowing, and he was overthrowing," Clark said. "After he settled down and relaxed, he had good control. It was his first outing, and he was excited."

"I had a little bit of the jitters," said Merriman, a transfer from Barton County. "The only work I've done was inside. So I had to adjust from indoors to the outdoors. The guys got me together and got me calmed down.

"As the game went on, the hitters did a great job. That helps, and I got more confidence," he said.

Culp, who is the Cats' top returning hitter, went three for four at the plate — including two doubles, two RBIs and three runs scored.

Former Wichita State player Brian Morrow had three runs batted in while going two for four.

Today's game against Washington has been moved back to Manhattan due to the field conditions in Salina. The game time has been moved from its original time of 8 p.m. to 4 p.m.

Lady Cats hoping for upset in Salina

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

K-State lost to Colorado by 52 points in the first round of the women's Big Eight tournament last season.

In that game, the Lady Cats made just eight of their 43 shots — a 19-percent clip. K-State was also limited to just eight first-half points en route to a 79-27 loss.

Saturday afternoon at the Bicentennial Center in Salina, the Lady Cats face that same Colorado team, again in the first round of the Big Eight tournament, with a chance to get even.

K-State finished the regular season with a 10-16 record overall, including 1-13 in the conference. The Lady Buffaloes were 24-2 and 12-2, first in the Big Eight and sixth in the nation.

Will the current Lady Cats be haunted by memories of last season?

"I don't know," K-State coach Susan Yow said with her face buried in her hands. "I couldn't answer that. But they really could be."

Yow said she and her staff will not be bothered by last season's game.

"You go on," she said. "You just learn to do that or you couldn't survive in this profession."

Senior Kelly Moylan, who started in last season's first-round loss and scored just two points, said the Lady Cats need to put it past them.

"We don't even want to talk about it," she said. "We can't afford to."

Indeed, the matter at hand for the Lady Cats is this season's game — not last season's.

"I think we'll definitely be ready," Moylan said. "What we need to look at is that this is just a pride factor."

"Colorado has everything to lose, and we have nothing to lose," she said.

The Lady Cats were tied with Iowa State for last in the conference. Both teams finished with 1-13 Big Eight records, and each team's only win was against each other.

But Iowa State won a coin toss and got the No. 7 seed despite a 2-24 overall record.

"I'm sure Colorado would prefer to be playing Iowa State," Yow said. "I believe that just because of our last meeting."

In that game, on Feb. 7 in Manhattan, the Lady Cats and the Lady Buffs were tied at 51 with 1:24 remaining. But Colorado finished the game by making six of seven free throws and went on to win, 61-51.

K-State shot 45 percent from the floor and held Colorado to 38 percent.

"On that Sunday, we were actually the better team," Yow said. "Just that day."

"And I keep thinking that all we have to do is be the better team on Saturday. Just one day."

The Lady Cats have been plagued by turnovers throughout the season. They averaged 21 turnovers a game, and they had more than 30 on three different occasions.

In fact, the first time K-State played Colorado, the Lady Cats had more turnovers (34) than points (33). The Lady Buffaloes handed K-State a 61-33 loss.

The Lady Cats' primary point guards — Andrea O'Neal and Gretchen Bertrand — have combined for a total of 179 of those turnovers, almost seven a game.

"That's been a problem for us," Yow said. "We've missed a true point guard, like Anthony Beane. It's been up and down in that area, and that's hurt us."

And although the Lady Cats have lost 26 of their last 29 Big Eight games, Yow said she knows how to ease the pain.

"The players have heard me say this for about the last three weeks — we're due for an upset," she said. "We're due for an upset."

"I just don't want this season to end."

BIG EIGHT WOMEN'S TOURNAMENT

Saturday-Monday, March 6-8

TAD MUSSELWHITE/Collegian

Heading into Big 8 tourney, Yow evaluates 10-16 season

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

The Lady Cats entered the 1992-93 season with the ninth-highest number of victories in the history of Division I women's basketball.

K-State finished the 1992-93 season with the worst Big Eight record in team history at 1-13. The Lady Cats finished the regular season 10-16 overall.

"Every team hits lulls," Coach Susan Yow said.

But Yow said this season's team is not too far from her preseason expectations.

"I think we're just three games off," she said. "And I think that the 10 wins that we do have, we really should have won."

"But when most teams go in slumps, they win sometimes. And that's the difference. We get in those moments — like every team in the country — but we lose them all."

"We have 10 wins this year," she said. "Of course I'm pleased with that. We have improved. If we hadn't won a game, but we played exactly like we played, we would still be a much better team than we ever were a year ago."

A year ago, K-State was 5-23 overall and 2-12 in the conference.

Two of the three games Yow said the Lady Cats should have won were a one-point loss to Illinois-Chicago on Dec. 21, and a 12-point loss to Wichita State a month later.

But she said it was the 67-61 loss to the then-1-13 Iowa State Cyclones that sent K-State into a tailspin.

"We played their record," Yow said. "I think that's when we dug a hole and put some dirt over us. That's the game we should have won."

But there was yet another game that Yow said could have turned the Lady Cats' season around — a 61-51 loss on Feb. 7 to Colorado, the No. 6 team in the nation and Saturday's opponent in the Big Eight tournament.

"That was the toughest game we've had all year," Colorado coach Ceal Barry said. "We used plays at the end that we haven't used all year."

Senior Leah Honeycutt, who has been with K-State during two of the three worst seasons in Lady Cat history, said the team needs to keep its collective head up.

"I've just been taking it one game at a time," she said. "You just have to take it gracefully."

"Going through coaching changes, there is always a re-building period."

But when Yow first came, Honeycutt's conference record was 9-7. Last season, the Lady Cats won two Big Eight games. This season, they were 1-13.

Does it have to get worse before it gets better?

"That's something you might want to ask Coach Yow," Honeycutt said.

Yow came to K-State with a 169-160 career coaching record. But she is just 31-50 at K-State, including 12-32 in the Big Eight.

"The bottom line is, at this level in the Big Eight, you have to win games," Yow said. "People really don't care how you do it."

"That's the bottom line."

SPORTS DIGEST

►CHIEFS' WORD WANTS A TRADE

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Barry Word is fed up with the juggling of the Kansas City Chiefs' running backs.

Word, a free agent, said he'll boycott the Chiefs' winter conditioning workouts and the minicamp in May.

For two seasons now, coach Marty Schottenheimer has been unable to settle on a featured back between Word, Christian Okoye and Harvey Williams.

Word started the first five games last season, and finished as the Chiefs' leading rusher with 607 yards on 163 carries. But 406 yards and 101 carries came in those first five games. He had only 62 carries the rest of the way.

"History has proven that there are not a lot of happy guys back there," Word said. "Unfortunately, I am the only one who will say it."

►GEORGIA TECH BLOWS UPSET BID

ATLANTA (AP) — Eleventh-ranked Florida State blew a 15-point lead, then rallied in the final 10 minutes to edge Georgia Tech 83-82 Thursday night behind Bob Sura's 22-point performance.

Malcolm Mackey's dunk with three seconds remaining ended the scoring, the inside shot coming when Tech's Travis Best — who was in three-point range — inexplicably dished underneath to Mackey for the easy, but pointless, dunk.

The victory snapped a two-game losing streak for FSU, which finished the regular season 22-8 and clinched second place in the Atlantic Coast Conference regular season race at 12-4.

Tech fell to 15-10 and 7-8. Sura's two free throws with 16 seconds remaining gave the Seminoles an 83-80 lead.

Program offers advice to cattlemen

RANCE AMES

"Marketing Our Product" is the theme for K-State's 80th annual Cattlemen's Day today in Brandeberry Indoor Complex.

"The theme reflects the emphasis on consumer demand and the use of beef products," co-chairman Gerry Kuh said.

Cattlemen's Day is an educational program put on for Kansas cattle producers, co-chairman Bob Brandt said.

"It allows us to interact with people in the beef industry on a more informal basis and show them what we are doing in the industry at K-State," Brandt said.

The keynote speaker is Bob Peterson, president and CEO of Iowa Beef Processors Inc. Peterson will speak at 1:15 p.m. in Brandeberry on "Remaining Competitive in the Beef Industry."

"As chairman of the largest beef-packing company in the world, he has a good understanding of the consumer and the beef industry's needs," Kuhl said.

Preceding Peterson's address, Ken Stielow, president of the Kansas Livestock Association, will speak on the Kansas beef industry.

"Timely Topics," an event where K-State researchers and extension specialists highlights of ongoing or completed projects, begins at 10:30 a.m.

Registration and browsing begin at 8 a.m. in Brandeberry.

Nearly 100 University and industry exhibits will be on display in Brandeberry, and the KSU Beef Research Unit, north of campus, will have an open house.

Horsemen converge at K-State

RHONDA WILSON
Collegian

Horsemen from across Kansas are heading to K-State for the 11th annual Horseman's Conference Saturday and Sunday.

The event is co-sponsored by agriculture's Department of Animal Sciences and Industry and the Department of Clinical Sciences in the College of Veterinary Medicine.

"This is our big conference to let people in the state of Kansas know about equine science at K-State," said Mark Arns, assistant professor of animal sciences and industry.

It is also a chance to update horsemen on the latest research in the equine field, he said.

K-State researchers will speak on topics ranging from "Equine Dentistry," to "Animal Rights and the Equine Industry."

Though some presentations are designed for professionals who raise horses, anyone with an interest is welcome to attend.

The event will feature a trade show Saturday, and a session on Sunday will provide helpful hints about competing in horse shows.

Companies and campus organizations will have booths in the Veterinary Medicine Complex Saturday. There will be demonstrations throughout the afternoon.

"The horse industry is changing a lot right now," said Chad Brown, senior in animal sciences and industry. "And the horse program at Kansas State is growing too."

Rodeo champion to offer clinics

It's the West, 1990s style.

Paul Tierney, world champion rodeo winner, will conduct a calf-roping and steer-wrestling school from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Sunday at Prairie Downs in St. George. He will also conduct a team-roping school from 5 to 10 p.m. at Prairie Downs indoor arena.

Tierney was 1980 World Champion all-around winner, 1979 World Champion Calf Roper, a two-time World Timed Event Champion and won several other competitions.

The event is sponsored by the Kansas State Rodeo Club as a fund-raising project. The schools cost $150 each, and anyone interested in roping can enroll. Registration is limited, but there is still space available.

Participants will ride their own horses, and calves and steers will be rented from a rodeo company.

"Rodeo is gaining in popularity every year," said Steve Frazier, coach of the K-State rodeo team. "High-school-age people are going to these camps to become professional in their sport, like the basketball camps."

Rodeo contenders earn more money than ever before, Frazier said.

He said one event can have the same prize money today as was available in prizes for the whole rodeo 30 or 40 years ago.

Admission to all events is free.

Coping with sudden death adds to stress

NEIL ANDERSON

Collegian

Coping with the loss of a loved one is a trying ordeal in an already trying world.

Some K-Staters have been plagued by recent losses of fellow students, faculty and staff.

"There are no clear-cut rules in getting over a death," David Balk, associate professor of human development and family studies, said.

Balk said there are two types of death, a sudden death or a death due to a long-term illness.

Research shows people recover more quickly from an expected death of a loved one because they are not taken as much by surprise, he said.

"You're not ambushed," Balk said.

He said there are other factors such as the financial, emotional and physical drains involved with someone suffering from a lingering fatal illness.

Research has shown the yearly cost of medical expenses can near $200,000, and the side effects of treatment are sometimes harmful and trying to a person, Balk said.

Surveys have been done for the past four semesters in the Introduction to Human Development classes, with 70 percent of the students responding. The average age of those surveyed was 21, and 81 percent were female.

"These surveys are no way representative of the campus, but they are interesting," Balk said.

The surveys showed that more than one-fourth had experienced a death in the family during the past year, and more than 40 percent had a close friend die in the past year.

Of the 40 percent who said they had a close friend die, 64 percent were accidents, 10 percent suicides and 7 percent murders. Balk said these are the leading causes of deaths in adolescents, and all are violent. He also said no other age range has such a high rate of violent deaths.

Sometimes the death of a student can affect a large number of people. Talking about the friend with others who knew the person can help the grieving process, Balk said.

Losing a family member, on the other hand, can be a lonely experience for a person, because he or she may have been the only one who knew the person well, Balk said.

Balk said people think there are certain stages to go through like denial, anger and bargaining. These are not, however, set in stone, he said.

"Being there is important," Jan Wheeler, counselor for University Counseling Services, said.

Wheeler and Dr. Sam Lacy, consulting psychiatrist with Counseling Services, run the Grief Group in Lafene Health Center.

"Treating the person still like a friend and not like they're weird is helpful," Wheeler said.

The Grief Group is still open for people to join, but Wheeler said they are trying to keep the group relatively small.

Wheeler said performing little rituals in honor of the lost one on special days, such as the person's birthday, can help.

Sometimes people will feel something is wrong with them if they feel the pain too long, Balk said.

"Don't take away their pain, and don't try to stop them from grieving," Balk said. He said this is one of the worst things one can do to someone who is grieving.

There are real differences in intensities between people grieving, he said. A loss can be traumatic to one person, but not to another.

One helpful thing to do is to ask people to talk about the lost ones, how they felt about them and how they feel now, he said.

Another thing that can be done for grieving friends is asking them if they have kept anything special that reminds them of the lost ones, he said.

"But beware of 'I know how you feel.' It's a cliché and can hurt the person," Balk said.

Nancy O'Conner, clinical director of the Family Center, said the therapists at the center assist clients in their grieving by looking at other significant relationships in their life and helping them get comfortable with the feelings they have.

O'Conner also said some people get comfortable with seeing a counselor after talking to a friend.

"The Family Center is not restricted to K-State, but open to the community also," O'Conner said.

"Sometimes, they are just needing someone to listen to them, not necessarily to vent or let it out, but just to listen," Balk said.

Balk said he recommends the book "When Bad Things Happen to Good People," by Rabbi Harold Kushner to people trying to cope with a loss of a close one.

"It puts words and ideas together that people may not have been able to do before," he said.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Fan wonders if eaters of fan loaves are half-baked

DEAR CASSANDRA,

Please answer my letter, as I value your advice. My question is about bread. Sure I like toast with my eggs and a good PB&J sandwich, but what's up with all these people walking around campus chowing on loaves of bread?

Could this be a psychedelic fad? If so, I'm gonna have a bake sale. I'm the first to admit that I'm strange, and I've done more than my share of acid. I don't think, however, I could be imagining all of these loaf munchers. If it is some sort of club, I want in. Please answer this, Cassandra, it has been bugging me for some time. I'm legit.

Your Confused Fan

DEAR CONFUSED,

I, too have noticed these bread eaters of whom you speak. They are always munching on those delicious mini-loaves available at the K-State Union.

I imagine they eat the bread because they like it. However, I seldom see any of them use condiments. Perhaps it is because condiments, such as butter, jelly and peanut butter cost extra at the Union.

As fads go, eating bread is a good one.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I've never been a big crossword puzzle fanatic, but about a month ago I got the bug and now can't wait for each day's Collegian.

I've noticed that the crossword is usually laid out with the clues on the left and the matrix on the right, but sometimes the other way around, and less frequently, I think, even with the clues above the matrix.

Is this all planned in advance to be sensitive to the frequency of right-and left-handers in the population of probable puzzle lovers? Is the third layout variant in recognition of the large number of Chinese students here on campus?

No Cute Handle — Just Curious

DEAR CURIOUS,

There are several reasons for the crossword layout. Yes, you are correct, the advertising staff does try to be sensitive to lefties and righties alike. But the main reason for the disparity in crossword location and presentation is usually determined by the number, size and shapes of advertisements.

In other words, the crossword puzzle usually goes where it fits. Happy to hear you enjoy it.

Letters to Cassandra may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie 116, Manhattan, Kan. 66506.

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content for the purpose of conserving space. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open to the public. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be maintained in the strictest confidence.

Regent nomination withdrawn have a hearing.

On Monday, the Senate confirmed Schrum's appointment to the Kansas Public Employees Retirement System Board of Trustees on a vote of 26-12, although the Senate Ways and Means Committee made no recommendation. The KPERs appointment expires July 1, when a new board will be formed under state law.

"One concern that was raised is that she had two gubernatorial appointments," said Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan. Serving on two such boards simultaneously would have been unprecedented, she said.

Oleen, who would have supported the appointment, said she is not particularly concerned that Manhattan, where K-State is located, might lose a regent.

"Where they come from is not as important as what they do," Oleen said.

Schrum is a retired teacher, working for many years in the Manhattan and Junction City areas. She served as department chairwoman of social studies in the Fort Riley school system.

She is former chairwoman of the Riley County Democratic Party.

Finney appointed Schrum to the Kansas Board of Regents for a four-year term last December to replace Charles Hostetter of Manhattan. She has been serving on the board since Jan. 1, while awaiting confirmation.

the Ryder office — and spoke with an FBI agent posing as a Ryder official, said Patrick Galasso, the truck rental agent.

"He didn't have a clue as to what was going on," Galasso said. "He thought he was talking to a Ryder rep."

The man returned to the rental office, was given $200 back, and was arrested by eight to 10 agents as he left the office, Galasso said.

"He didn't want to give up that $400. He just wanted that money," Galasso added.

The man was accompanied by another man when he rented the truck, but was alone on subsequent visits, Galasso said. He said he didn't remember what the second man looked like.

Both Mascitelli and Galasso said the suspect didn't behave nervously in any way. Mascitelli described him as short and frail with a beard and a thick accent.

UFOs existence remains unanswered

"The corollary is that they have a 'hands-off' policy. But that's all speculation."

I tell Barry Adams that I talked to a biologist about the question of life "out there."

"Let me guess what the biologists said," he said. "They said there is no life out there."

I expected that, too. I had read that many biologists believe that life is exclusively Earth's. That life is, to borrow a line from a famous comic book writer, a virus clinging to a mudball floating through an endless sea of nothingness.

Terry Johnson is a good guy. He is a biologist. He has never been abducted by aliens.

He says, however, that he believes in the possibility of life elsewhere in the universe.

"The possibility is exceedingly high," he says. "If there's life out there," Johnson says, "it could go both ways. It could be more advanced, it could be less advanced. One could only speculate."

I tell him I know of a doctor in New Mexico who is pretty positive.

"I don't know of anyone who's ever been abducted. I personally have never talked with anyone who's been abducted," he says. "My in-laws on the other hand ..."

So I ask him why we are so skeptical. Why we turn our nose up at the notion of alien abductions and spaceships examining the earth. Why it seems so wacky.

"Humans tend to be very parochial," he says. "We tend to be able to couch our spiritual beliefs. We believe sometimes that humans are highly advanced. That's how we are able to do some of the terrible things that we do."

"If ever we are faced with the possibility that there is some sort of higher intelligence out there it would be interesting to see how we would react."

MONDAY

Condoms promoted as alternative to luck

CONDOM SENSE — SAFER BREAK WEEK

March 8-12

Information packets from Lafene will contain condom cards, a coupon offering students an HIV test at half-price and brochures on AIDS, sexually transmitted diseases and other topics dealing with safe sex.

Condom cards will be available Monday night in the residence hall food centers and from 10 a.m. to noon Tuesday-Thursday in the K-State Union.

Lafene Health Center is selling condom cards for its "Condom Sense — Safer Break Week '93."

"Don't let your luck run out. Use condom sense" is printed on the front of the shamrock-shaped cards. Each card contains a condom inside.

The slogan and the cards are an effort to promote the issue of responsibility and to encourage students to keep themselves safe and healthy, said Cindy Burke, director of health education at Lafene.

Condom cards will be inside information packets from Lafene. The packet will contain brochures with information on sexually transmitted diseases, AIDS and other topics related to safe sex.

There also will be a coupon in the packet that will offer students an HIV test at half price March 8-19.

Burke said this is the fourth year K-State has had a Condom Sense Week but the first year Lafene has offered condom cards.

The idea for the shamrock-shaped cards came when Burke saw St. Patrick's Day merchandise.

"We were looking for something catchy for our logo," she said.

She said the theme of luck seemed to fit the campaign because students aren't having safe sex.

"So many students view their sexual habits as luck," she said. "They say, 'I hope I don't get HIV' or 'I hope I'm not pregnant.'"

"Hope is not a form of protection," Burke said.

By selling the condom cards, Lafene is hoping students will not be intimidated by getting protection.

Michele Meier, sophomore in business, was at one of the tables that sold the condom cards last week.

"Most of the people kind of just laughed at them," she said. "I think they maybe were embarrassed."

A lot of women who bought them bought two or three to send to their friends as gag gifts, Meier said.

Burke also said students have been buying them as a joke or as a fun way to remind friends to protect themselves.

Condom cards will be available Monday night in the residence hall food centers and from 10 a.m. to noon Tuesday through Thursday in the K-State Union.

Organizations combine to make spring break safer

RHONDA WILSON
Collegian

The K-State Union and Lafene Health Center are combining efforts to promote a safe and fun spring break.

K-State's "Condom Sense — Safer Break Week '93" is March 8-12.

Lafene is sponsoring "Condom Sense — Safer Break Week," and the Union is sponsoring "Springfest '93." The organizations decided to combine efforts to promote a fun and safe spring break, Nancy Bartell, clothing and gift buyer for K-State Union Bookstore, said.

The Union will promote different activities and vacation spots for spring break, she said.

"We wanted the students to know we are excited for spring break too," Bartell said.

Organizers tried to ensure students would have time available to participate in the week's activities. That is why the event is two weeks before spring break instead of the week before, Cindy Burke, director of health education for Lafene, said.

During the week, rooms throughout the Union will be decorated to represent different spring break vacation spots.

Students who visit Union Station this week will see a Hawaiian theme, Texas and Padre Island, Aspen, Florida and other popular destinations will be represented in various other rooms throughout the Union, Bartell said.

Each day of the week, there will be a drawing for different prizes. These prizes include coolers full of pop, a cordless telephone and a 25-inch television, and on March 18 the bookstore will be giving away a class ring, Bartell said.

A New York-style street fair will be the highlight of the week's activities.

The fair will be from 10 a.m. until noon, Thursday in the Union Courtyard.

A variety of booths, including a souvenir stand, a candy stand, a news stand and a stand that features plants and flowers will be represented at the fair.

Lafene has organized games, giveaways and other activities for the fair, as well as booths with safety information concerning sun tanning, alcohol and sex, Burke said.

Sixty players tangled and twisted for two hours on 75 Milton Bradley Twister mats at the first Theta Xi and Alpha Chi Omega Twistermania fundraiser Sunday afternoon.

Crowd totals tallied about 100, with spectators milling in and out of Ahearn Field House throughout the competition.

Play began with a practice round, followed by two consecutive official rounds.

A big spinner was created with the organizers taking turns spinning and declaring the fate of the Twister players.

Rules for twisting were announced as several judges collaborated around the mat to concentrate on each competitor's twisting strategy.

Phil Frazier, senior in chemistry and Theta Xi judge, was keyed into the rules of the game as he focused on the play.

"Any parts other than hands or feet don't touch the mat," Frazier said. "Also, the feet or hands should be on the appropriate dots."

A lengthy first round ended as Liz Dowd, junior in business administration, and Tom Shirley, freshmen in architectural engineering, endured some knotting of body parts and twisting in tight quarters.

"It's harder than it looks," Tom Shirley, first-round champion, said. "It was a good workout."

Dowd said she thought it was more of a mind game.

"You have to use your head and think about what you're going to do before you hear them call the color," Dowd said.

Free pizzas were awarded to the top 10 winners of the final two rounds. Both first-place twisters were awarded $25.

Spotters discuss severe weather

RHONDA WILSON
Collegian

It starts when you see that annoying rain cloud or tornado symbol in the corner of your favorite television show.

As you search the channels for a station that is free of warning symbols, "the eyes of Riley County" have been called into action.

These weather spotters are members of the Weather Amateur Radio Network, or WARN. As an introduction to Severe Weather Awareness Week Mar. 8-12, the group answered questions and displayed information at a table Saturday in Manhattan Town Center.

The week was designated in Kansas by Gov. Joan Finney. Activities include a statewide tornado safety drill on Tuesday.

In local communities throughout the state, severe weather awareness meetings will be open to the public. Manhattan's meeting will be March 22 at the Manhattan Fire Department on Denison Avenue.

Members of WARN will be there to give the public an introduction to severe weather and severe weather safety.

WARN spotters are trained volunteers who look for incoming severe weather from their assigned positions in the county.

Once they see the storm, observations are transmitted to the Emergency Operations Center, where the storm reports are monitored. The storm is plotted on a map, while the sirens are ready to be sounded if necessary.

"We're trying to provide warning for Riley County," Tracy Tipping, coordinator of WARN, said. "From the southern-most post in Riley County, we can give Manhattan about 10 to 15 minutes warning."

Tipping has been observing weather for 12 years, but WARN has only been in existence for two years.

Prior to that, cities in Riley County relied on volunteer firefighters, police and concerned citizens to call whenever severe weather was approaching, Tipping said.

The group now supplies the county with trained weather spotters.

"Before someone is considered a spotter, they go through some basic training," Tipping said.

During a one-year training course, potential spotters are taught simple meteorology of a thunderstorm, what a tornado looks like, radio procedures, as well as safety and evacuation procedures. Then the trainees are paired with veteran spotters.

Some of the spotters have been watching weather as a hobby nearly

NEWS DIGEST

► KANSAS SUPREME COURT UPHOLDS CONVICTION OF SOLDIER IN CONVENIENCE STORE SLAYING

TOPEKA (AP) — The Kansas Supreme Court upheld unanimously Friday the life sentence of a Fort Riley soldier and Operation Desert Storm veteran, who with a companion, commandeered a military vehicle, robbed a convenience store in battle dress and killed the clerk.

The court rejected an appeal filed by attorneys for Jason Turner, one of two Fort Riley soldiers who robbed Pate's Convenience Store, located northwest of Junction City, after stealing a HUM-V.

Turner shot the clerk, Catherine Heintze, a K-State sophomore, in the head when he saw her trigger a silent alarm during the robbery. The next day he gave the shell casing of the lethal bullet to his cohort, Nathaniel Ellibee, as a souvenir.

The high court dismissed the contention of Turner's attorneys that the shooting was accidental and was somehow related to his service in Saudi Arabia during Operation Desert Storm.

JFK's Americas dream lives on

SHANNON WILSON
Collegian

Almost 30 years since President John F. Kennedy was assassinated, one of his programs lives on.

The Partners of the Americas program was the "brainchild of President Kennedy after the Peace Corps," said Len Harbers, president of the Kansas-Paraguay chapter.

Members of the chapter celebrated the organization's 25th anniversary Saturday.

"For the past 10 years there has been an ongoing student exchange with Kansas' regents schools and two universities in Paraguay.

"Paraguay students can come study at our six regents schools for in-state fees. Likewise, Kansas students can study at their schools for the lowest tuition," Harbers said.

The exchanges expose the two cultures to one another, he said.

The chapter develops committees that help to organize the exchanges. Committees range from agriculture to health to sports, Harbers said.

At Saturday's celebration a new committee was formed to deal with civic affairs, Harbers said. As the country prepares for an election and makes the transition to democracy, Paraguayans need advice and counsel, he said.

The members of the partnership are also excited about a weaving project, Harbers said.

"We want to keep young girls 14 and older in their small village of Limpio," Harbers said.

By teaching the girls weaving they have a marketable skill, he said.

The Paraguay delegation toured the Educational Communications Center in Bob Dole Hall and discussed the possibility of becoming involved in the Advanced Communications Technology Satellite project.

The ACTS project is being developed by NASA in cooperation with Georgetown University and K-State, Mel Chastain, director of the ECC, said.

With the satellite, an area can be targeted and can conduct interactive instructional conferences and courses, Chastain said.

"We're trying to learn from each other," he said.

Special guest at the celebration was Juan Esteban Aguirre Jr., the ambassador of Paraguay to the United States. Governor Joan Finney proclaimed the Ambassador an honorary Kansan, Harbers said.

"It's been a wonderful experience," Aguirre said.

Australian Chamber Orchestra
Daniel McKelway, clarinet soloist
Wednesday, March 17, 8 p.m.

No, there won't be any kangaroos, and Crocodile Dundee won't make a guest appearance. But when the Australian Chamber Orchestra comes to McCain, you'll get a chance to experience what The Bulletin with Newsweek (Australia) calls "a stratospheric standard" in classical music.

The group, led by hyper-talented young Aussie director, Richard Tognetti at lead violin, will perform works by Mozart, Haydn, Bartók and Weber.

Joining the ACO is clarinet soloist, Daniel McKelway. The Seattle Post-Intelligencer characterized his style as "like a trapeze artist, stunning us with his risky tricks and persuading us by his poetry."

Don't miss this performance by the finest young musicians Australia has to offer.

Baby-busters have arrived

WE SUGGEST

It's time to wake up and clean up.

Wake-up calls are, for the most part, unsuccessful or ignored.

This wake-up call should not be ignored. The baby boomer generation has moved into the White House. The 20-something, or baby-buster generation, is moving closer to positions of power.

The Feb. 22, 1993, issue of U.S. News & World Report has an article titled "Just Fix It," which cites Bill Strauss and Neil Howe's book, "13th Gen: Abort, Retry, Ignore, Fail?"

The article said Americans born between 1961 and 1981 will be left with the dirty work of fixing inherited problems other generations — the ones seen as selfish baby boomers and greedy seniors — lack the vision and political courage to resolve.

The present federal deficit shows that everyone owes $15,000. Most college students already owe that much in loans.

One of the 20-something responses is the "Lead ... or Leave" movement. The movement's concerns are the federal deficit and the inequities of the Social Security system.

The main purpose of college is to prepare for the future. So, why not look a little further into the future?

They're not just our parents' problems anymore.

HE CAME BEARING CITRUS

ED
SKOOG

It is a cold and mutant afternoon. Am watching "Grand Ol' Opry" reruns on TNN despite poor reception, which makes red-checked dresses and fiddle-bows zone in and zone out. Am drinking from a bottle of Hungarian wine and am expecting the day to roar itself out any minute.

Then the doorbell rings, and I am answering it. A man in a broad hat and boots is standing on my porch. As if to weigh them, he is holding a grapefruit in one hand and an orange in the other. So, I step out and say hello.

"Howdy," he says. "Got a van-full of fruit. Selling them by the case and by the half-case. Now looka here."

He pulls a buckknife from his shirt pocket and is extracting the blade. He looks roadworn in his dirty western shirt. I can hear Loretta Lynn singing on the television inside. I can see the man's breath as he carves wedges out of the orange, and then out of the grapefruit.

He offers a wedge of each to me. "Best crop in years," he says, sucking on an orange wedge himself.

Grapefruit pulp is rangy when you are eating it on a front porch in February. Am thinking of summer mornings, of sitting on this porch reading newspapers and eating grapefruit and drinking iced teas.

Am thinking of the way I am taught to eat grapefruit, not to cut in wedges or peel, but to slice across the equator and spoon out the innards with a grapefruit spoon. There are persons in utensil factories making spoons to grapefruit specifications: stout, the bowl of the spoon tapering towards the front, short tines forking off of the lip. The factory is also making automatic spaghetti forks, potato peelers and apple corers.

Am not in possession of a grapefruit spoon. Am thinking that this is a disadvantage to leaving the home of my parents several years ago to attend college. No grapefruit spoons. No one to remind me to eat grapefruit.

This man from Texas is reminding me to eat grapefruit. He stands to gain by my eating grapefruit. Am thinking what a good job.

"Do you sell by the quarter-case?" I am asking.

"Nossir. Just case and half-case. Can sell you a half-case for twenty five. Cut a few bucks off the standard. Now, I can mix it evenly oranges and grapefruit, or I can hedge it with more oranges."

"Can you put in mostly grapefruit?"

"Yessir. Want me to go get it?"

"Well," I say. Am feeling as if it's necessary to say "Well," at this moment because it is a standard Kansas thing to be saying "Well," before making any informal purchase of over $10.

Am remembering the story of a mysterious grandrelative who truck-farmed in the Rio Grande valley during the 1940s and '50s. Legendary grapefruits that are remembered every breakfast.

"Well, I'm low on cash, tell you the truth," I say. "College and all."

"Know all about it," he says. "Got myself three degrees. Here I am selling grapefruit. How about your roommates — a case'd be cheap per person."

"Oh, they're all out of town at some festival or other. They're hippies."

"Nothing wrong with that. I been a hippie 20 years now. Feels great."

Am a sucker for grapefruit. I pay for a half-case with a check and bring the cardboard box the man prepares for me inside. It is full of fat dirty grapefruit, some still connected to each other by a black stem, appearing in the dim kitchen light to be mutant grapes.

I slice one open and sit down in front of the TV set. The "Grand Ol' Opry" is over. The grapefruit is good.

Memoirs of a sick ninja

"... [they] found no end, in wand'ring mazes lost."
— John Milton.

Jan. 12, 1993: He buys it on impulse. He installs it the same day. The sound, he finds, is incredible on his sound card. Its name is "Crusaders of the Dark Savant." It is a computer role-playing game.

JOHN
HAWKS

His friends (me included) are naturally curious to see what "Chris" (not his real name) has bought. Gathered around him, we watch as he creates his first party of characters, naming each of them after one of us. Kerbage and Wayne, the thieves; Ericage and Billage, the thieves; Mervis, the mage; Johan, the priest. The game has quickly become a spectator sport.

He vows to finish by Martin Luther King Jr. Day.

Jan. 18 (Martin Luther King Jr. Day): I have been watching him play for a week now. Ericage is a ninja. After finding a number of things out, Chris decides to start over with a new party. Another friend, "Warren" (not his real name), takes over his old party.

Within a day, Chris' new party is at the same level as his old one. It is now generally acknowledged he will not finish before spring break.

Jan. 25: After two weeks of watching, I spend an evening forming a party. I am the fourth. Chris' computer is now on most of the time playing the game. We all realize it is habit-forming.

but we don't care. Feb. 2 (Groundhog Day): Chris plays late into the night, with me watching. At 12:30, we turn down the sound so Chris' roommate can sleep.

At 2 a.m., while exploring a cave of giants, Chris encounters a tyrannosaur named "SPOT" (not his real name). Chris cannot defeat SPOT within an hour. Tired, we go to bed.

Feb. 12: After several weeks of only watching, I play with my own characters for an evening. Within an hour, I find the mapping kit, which Chris and others have done without for weeks.

I am immediately thrown off the computer so the others can claim the mapping kit in their own games.

It is now known that the game will not be completed before the end of the semester.

Feb. 19: Warren finds a way to join the "Umpani" (not their real name), a group that Chris has all but killed off in his game. Tensions mount. Nearly all the non-player characters in Chris' game are dead, and he needs answers.

Feb. 23: Unable to find a boat, Chris swims to the Isle of Crypts. Still no answers.

Feb. 27: I find a way into the black market. Scores of killer weapons are available to me. I am immediately thrown off the computer so others can buy the fearsome bushido blade for their samurai.

March 1: I kill SPOT. It is a personal triumph. Only, for Chris could have beaten him long before.

March 2: I join the Umpani and acquire the Thermal Pineapple. Still, no way into the Rattkin Ruins. K'Borra T'Rang shafts me for 10,000 gold pieces.

March 4: Friends find me screaming "Stop breathing acid spray on me!" and drag me off the computer.

March 6: Chris, frustrated by setbacks, starts a new party. Two ninjas, three monks and a bard.

DEATH PENALTY

Questions galore mark punishment issues

Editor,

A principle possibly accepted universally is that all societies punish the violation of their cultural norms. The justifications of punishment, however, are debatable to an important degree.

"Retribution," for example, is a critical concept in the social sciences. It is defined as the subjecting of an offender to suffering comparable to that caused by the offense. "An eye for an eye" lies in the moral balance. Similarly, "deterrence" assumes that the individuals are rational creatures who engage in deviance for personal gain. To discourage criminality, then, the pains of punishment should outweigh the pleasures of deviance.

John Hawks' "Capital! Punishment" column in the Feb. 22 Collegian is entirely compatible with the philosophy of these two concepts. The article leaves us with the feeling that contemporary society is unable to find a way to control deviance, unless it may depend upon the use of the death penalty.

Hawks claims that society has "confused the ideas of tolerance and justice." Key in his concern is that prisoners "are fed, housed and given opportunities for advancement equally."

Unfortunately, the article disdains the profound human value implicit in contemporary approaches of punishment. "Rehabilitation" is a concept that recognizes the effects of social forces on the individual's behavior. This assumes that crime and other forms of deviance are largely consequences of unfavorable social environment, such as poverty or unemployment. The reforming of the offender is decisive to preclude subsequent offenses.

The article ignores that deviance is a socially created phenomenon. No behavior is intrinsically deviant. John Macdonis (1991) asks, "Why put someone to death for an act of theft, for example, if the crime can be discouraged by a lesser penalty?"

Indeed, if our concern is conformity, one should never assume that a stronger dose of punishment can effectively stop crime. As a product of social forces more than of individuals, deviances' causes are not being focused with that perspective.

Ironically, the problem of moral balance is more complex. Crime is "uncivilized" because of the "civilization" itself. Instead of suffering, rehabilitation approach emphasizes constructive improvement through different strategies.

This, of course, does not mean that society must exonerate personal responsibility for the individual's actions. The evaluation of individual responsibility, however, must include the impact of social forces on the individuals. Rehabilitation is embedded in morality. No society could aspire to social equality through the use of the death penalty, for social inequality is inherent in any social organization. It advances one conception of social morality at the expense of another.

Thus, the question of justification is, how does the "civilized" society demonstrate scientifically that punishment upholds social morality?

RESPONSE

Columnist seems to live a double life

Editor,

John Hart claims in two columns from recent memory that humanity is governed by a set of absolute truths around which society should be based and to which everyone should adhere. Someone please correct me if I am misrepresenting Hart.

Then, in his March 2 column, Hart claims that "the best course of action is to decide for yourself which belief system makes the most sense, exercise faith and then measure the value of your beliefs by living them out."

I am left dumbfounded. Why this glaring contradiction? Is Hart coming out of the closet as (gasp) a moral relativist? Is he so intimidated by Brad Seaborn that he is going to jump off his soapbox and quit telling society how to act? Or is this simply a reflection of his profound lack of rationale and depth as a columnist?

Just curious.

SGA

Hawks' Senate column only added to trouble

Editor,

It seems to me it is easier to attack what one is unsure or is uneducated about, instead of actually taking the time to learn about it. This seems to be what columnist John Hawks did on March 1.

In a column attacking the Student Governing Association, Hawks appeared to be feeding the fires of confusion that many students suffer due to a lack of information or interest in SGA. Hawks' column only showed his own ignorance in attacking an organization in which he has not taken an active role, or even tried to find out about. Throughout his column, Hawks made many comments which were misleading or false.

To begin with, he claimed that Student Senate did not care about its off-campus residents, and that is why ideas such as a shuttle system have never taken shape.

Student Senate is now currently implementing a study to look into the feasibility of a campus shuttle system. In last week's Senate meeting, a resolution was passed that asked the city of Manhattan to take an active role in the inspection of rental property for safety standards. This resolution was expressly passed for the reason of protecting our off-campus students.

According to Hawks, residence affiliation should be printed on the ballot so that voters can see where each candidate lives. To me it does not matter where a candidate lives as long as he or she represents and cares for this University and his or her constituents. Hawks also made it a point to use the word majority when referring to the athletic fee increase. I seriously doubt that Hawks talked to more than 10,000-plus students to see how they felt on the issue.

I find it interesting that he was so willing to attack SGA for passing a fee increase in athletics, but did not attack us for passing an increase for Student Publications, which directly affects his job as a Collegian columnist.

SGA does its best to represent the students of this University. We may not always be right, but we are there putting in our time to try to improve the life of the students on this campus. When it comes down to it, SGA is simply the servant of the K-State student.

Waiting period may hurt some in society

Editor,

In response to the March 4 Collegian editorial "7 days won't hurt," — yes they will. The woman being stalked by a violent ex-husband, the Korean shopkeeper in a rough neighborhood, the black project-dwellers who wish to fend off the Crips and Bloods, could all potentially be hurt, or killed, by a waiting period.

Clones bury Wildcats with 2nd-half fury

Aaron Collier, Wildcat forward, tries to shoot over the Cyclones' Loren Meyer during the Cats' 79-61 loss at Hilton Coliseum in Ames, Iowa. K-State couldn't hang on to a 29-27 halftime lead.

SCOTT ABEL

Collegian

AMES, Iowa — For a half, it looked like K-State might pull off what no one else has been able to do for 16 straight games — beat Iowa State in Hilton Coliseum.

For a half.

Leading 29-27 at halftime, the Cat lead — and the game — evaporated under a second-half shooting onslaught from the Cyclones.

Iowa State shot just 41 percent from the field in the first 20 minutes but hit a blistering 74 percent in the second to blow away the Wildcats, 79-61.

"They played awfully well," Coach Dana Altman said.

"But I thought, defensively, we backed off, and our turnovers allowed them to get some of those easy opportunities that they got."

Forward Fred Hoiberg got the Cyclones rolling with a three-pointer just nine seconds into the second half to give them a lead they would never give up.

The Cyclones exploded on a 12-3 run over the next four minutes, and K-State called a timeout.

But Iowa State wasn't done. The Cyclones pushed the lead to 54-37 with 12:08 left, and another trey from Hoiberg at the seven-minute mark made the margin 19 points.

In the second half, Hoiberg hit five of his six field-goal attempts, four of them treys, and guard Justus Thigpen hit five of his eight shots to lead all scorers with 20 points.

"I think that it was our shot selection in the beginning of the second half," guard Anthony Beane said of Iowa State's run.

"We took quick shots, and that's what they wanted. That's something we didn't do in the first half."

It appeared the game might be finished early. After Beane scored on a 10-foot jumper for the first points of the game, Iowa State caught the Cat defense dozing.

Cyclone center Loren Meyer scored four straight times on transition fast breaks, and Iowa State racked up a 10-2 lead.

The Cyclones expanded their lead to 20-8 with 9:36 left in the half when K-State fought back.

Sparked by Deryl Cunningham's 10 points and Aaron Collier's eight rebounds, K-State went on a 21-7.

The Cats narrowed the gap to two points when Askia Jones scored a layup to cut the lead to 25-23 with 4:06 left in the half.

Jones then connected on an NBA-range three-pointer to put the Cats up 26-25 with 3:21 left, and the Cats took a 29-27 halftime lead.

"In the first half, we started very poorly," Altman said. "But I thought when we came back, we were in good shape at halftime."

K-State's defense and rebounding effort was the key to its first-half comeback. The Cats were out-rebounding Iowa State 24-16 at the half.

K-State's zone defense held the Cyclones' Ron Bayless and Thigpen to a combined six of 16.

But the first-half success was lost in the carnage of the second.

"It don't matter, because we lost," Cunningham said. "We need to play hard. We gave up 52 points in the second half. We played no defense. I can't remember when we've done that."

Cats finish stand with 21-6 victory

BRIAN ANDERSON

Collegian

Washington came from behind in the second game Saturday at Frank Myers Field to sweep both ends of the doubleheader, 10-3 and 13-10, leaving Coach Mike Clark worried about his Wildcat team.

Twenty-four hours later, however, Clark had a look of peace after K-State, now 3-3, bombed Emporia State, 21-6, to earn a split in its four-game weekend home stand.

K-State held off Washington (7-8) in the ninth inning Friday night in Manhattan to win, 8-7.

But Clark said his team needs help. "Our pitching and defense have a long way to go," he said Saturday.

K-State was the aggressor Sunday afternoon, punching out 16 hits — five for extra bases — in the 21-6 win over the Hornets.

The Cats' main contributor was shortstop Todd Petering. The transfer from Oklahoma Christian University had five RBIs and went three-for-five at the plate, including a grand slam in the seventh inning.

"I was down on the count at 2-2, and he threw a fastball right down the pipe," Petering said of his home run.

"I'm more concentrated when there is two strikes on me," he said. "I sat back on it, but I think the wind didn't hurt any either."

Petering went five-for-10 in the last two games of the weekend.

"I was trying to relax when I got to plate," he said. "The added batting practice has helped. I go up to there looking for my swing."

Tim Decker got his first win for the Cats, despite having the stomach flu. Greg Meuhlbauer gave up five runs in the first inning and was handed his second loss of the season.

First baseman Brian Morrow went two-for-three with a home run and three RBIs, and catcher Brian Culp, right fielder Chris Wolf and third baseman Kevin McMullin each drove in two runs for K-State.

The Cats pounded 13 hits in the second game of Saturday's doubleheader, but K-State committed three errors while David Leonhart and Pat Ralston (0-1) gave up a total 15 hits.

"When you score 10 runs, you should win the ballgame," Clark said.

Washington broke open an 8-8 tie in the seventh inning with four runs. The Huskies used four hits — including two infield singles, a batter being hit by a pitch and a K-State error to gain the lead.

"They're a good ballclub. That's why we're playing good teams early — so we can learn from our mistakes," Clark said of the Huskies, who are picked to win the Pacific Ten North division.

"Every time they would cut off a rally, they'd score runs from our pitching and defensive mistakes," he said. "What's going to make us better is to learn from our mistakes."

Tim Campbell (1-0) and Eric Schmidt combined for a two-hitter in the first game to give the Huskies a 10-3 win in the seven-inning match.

Scott Dreiling (0-1) suffered the loss for the Cats as he surrendered eight earned runs and 11 hits in five and two-thirds innings.

The Cats allowed five runs in the last two innings Friday night, but held on for the 8-7 win over Washington. Dan Driskill got the win (1-1), and Brett Bock got his eighth career save, tying a school record.

Fifth-seeded Cats to play NU

The stage is set.

With Saturday's loss to Iowa State, the Cats claimed the No. 5 seed for the Big Eight tournament next weekend at Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo.

K-State will meet No. 4 Nebraska — which beat Oklahoma 94-83 Sunday — at noon Friday, desperately needing a win to gain a berth in the NCAA Tournament.

The Cats split the series with Nebraska, winning 66-64 at Nebraska and falling here, 80-59.

In other tourney games, No. 1 seed Kansas will meet No. 8 Colorado at 2 p.m. Second-seeded Oklahoma State will play No. 7 Missouri at 6 p.m., and third-seeded Iowa State will play No. 6 OU at 8 p.m.

BIG EIGHT TOURNAMENT

Lady Cats lose hard-fought game to CU, 55-41

K-State falls in career finales of Moylan, Honeycutt

STEVEN ROCK

Collegian

SALINA — Prior to Saturday's game against Colorado, Lady Cat forward Leah Honeycutt said she didn't want a repeat performance of last year.

"We want to make sure that doesn't happen again," she said Friday of the 79-27 loss to Colorado in the first round of last season's Big Eight tournament.

And although K-State ended its season with a 55-41 loss at the Bicentennial Center in this season's tourney, Honeycutt got her wish.

"I think we all just have great satisfaction in the way we played them," she said. "I'm glad the team ended up on a positive note."

Indeed, K-State had plenty of reasons to be positive about the season-ending loss.

The Lady Cats held the Lady Buffaloes to just 55 points, 20 below their average.

Colorado — 47-percent shooters for the season — was limited to just 42 percent against K-State, including a dismal 26 percent in the first half.

K-State out-rebounded Colorado 39-28. The Lady Buffs have been averaging 38 boards a game.

Colorado's second-leading scorer, all-Big Eight selection Mindy Henry, was limited to just two points. Her lone field goal came with three seconds to play.

And, perhaps most importantly, the Wildcats took a brief lead in the second half that gave No. 6 Colorado a scare.

"I think we spilled our guts on the floor," Lady Cat coach Susan Yow said. "I don't think we could have played any harder. We had all the heart we needed."

"We just ran out of gas."

Indeed, Colorado shuffled players in and out of the game while K-State primarily used the same seven. The Lady Buff bench outscored K-State's, 26-8.

But the Lady Cats' brief 25-24 lead — four minutes into the second half on a pair of free throws by Kelly Moylan — sent the bench into jubilation.

"The adrenaline started to go," Honeycutt said. "I think the feeling was, 'Let's go. We can do this.'"

But the Lady Cats' fatigue began to take its toll, and after Colorado's Shelley Sheetz hit a jumper just 15 seconds later, the Lady Buffs had the lead for good.

Colorado's 22-7 run buried K-State.

"I hate it for us because we played a really hard game," Yow said. "But we played with a tremendous amount of heart."

The game marked the career finales for seniors Honeycutt and Moylan. Honeycutt finished with four points and eight rebounds, Moylan had seven points.

Both Moylan and Honeycutt were fighting back tears after the game.

"I think I can speak for both of us," Moylan said. "In our minds, we just wanted to leave our careers knowing that we gave it our best shot."

"I think we did that."

And Yow said that the seniors have given the Lady Cats a reason to be optimistic.

"Kelly and Leah have left us with something to build upon," she said. "That was hard a year ago because we just bottomed out."

"But they've really left us with something to build on for the next couple of years."

Comic opera tells of fairytale romance

DIANE HUTCHISON
Collegian

"Martha" was supposed to have been an opera for people who hate operas. That may have been true, but I wouldn't know for sure.

This was my first opera, and I loved it. The reason may have been because I had no expectations, except one.

It was also supposed to be a comic opera. This would seem a hard task because it was the first performance of music professor Jean Sloop's English translation. I was not disappointed.

"Martha" is the fairytale story of Lady Harriet Durham, maid of honor to the queen. She has everything she thought she wanted, but she finds herself bored.

Harriet was well sung by Aggie Callison, junior in applied music, on Saturday. The part was played by Keong-Ok Song, graduate student in music, during Friday's performance.

Sir Tristan Mickleford, played by David Perkins, graduate student in music, tries unsuccessfully to court her. Her friend Nancy, played by Juli Borst, senior in applied music, tries to cheer her up.

When she overhears servants talking about the Richmond Fair, she decides to go in disguise, along with Nancy and Tristan.

The fair is an auction where farmers and their wives hire servant-maids. Among the farmers are Plunkett, played by Richard Webster, sophomore in applied music, and his foster brother, Lionel, played by Robert Fann, senior in music. Their two voices came together well in some of the close-harmony scenes.

Harriet and Nancy, calling themselves Martha and Julia, are hired by Plunkett and Lionel.

The comedy unfolds when Plunkett and Lionel find that Martha and Julia do not know how to do anything. It was funny to see them try to teach the girls how to spin.

Martha tries to convince Lionel she is a lazy maid and only good for singing.

Lionel asks her to sing for him. So, she sings "The Last Rose of Summer," a beautiful Irish ballad. When she stops, Lionel declares his love for her. Martha laughs and turns him away.

Tristan helps Harriet and Nancy escape that night. This was the highlight of the musical, with the two women drawing out the song and Tristan begging them to hurry.

Lionel sees Harriet again at the queen's hunt, believing she is Nancy.

He then gives his father's ring to Plunkett and tells him to show it to the queen. His father had promised that the queen would recognize it and protect him.

Harriet tells him that the ring means he is the lost Earl of Derby, then offers her love to him. He rejects her, still confused and unwilling to trust her.

Meanwhile, Plunkett and Nancy have begun to court each other. I couldn't stop laughing as Plunkett talked of the girls he knew would marry him. He finally tells Nancy he loves her but that he will wait for his brother's happiness.

The farmers and the wives help Harriet restage the fair. Plunkett lures Lionel there. When he sees Harriet, she renounces her life with the court and tells him she loves him.

I thoroughly enjoyed the performance. There were a few times I could not clearly hear the singers, but I was sitting close to the orchestra.

The set design and costumes were beautifully done. The orchestra was the perfect accompaniment, and the supporting cast added colorful humor to the story.

"Martha" may not have turned opera-haters into opera-fans, but it was well worth seeing.

ESSENTIALS

Choosing between two lovers

DEAR CASSANDRA,

A few months ago, I gave up a three-year relationship, because I felt my boyfriend (almost fiancé) wanted to sow his wild oats. There was an incident with another woman that led to this break-up.

Since then, I had been in another relationship that has recently ended, and I am now dating a very good man back home. The problem is my ex-boyfriend now wants me back. I still love him very much, but I don't feel passionately toward him anymore.

On the other hand, the man at home treats me really good and loves me. I think I love him, too, but I haven't yet fallen in love.

I feel like I'm being pressured by my ex to get rid of the guy at home. I've heard that he isn't as nice as he makes out. Someone told me that he has slept with women and made them feel good, but to his friends he would say different.

What should I do? Do I stop seeing both of them, or do I stick with the man at home and hope he's not as bad as people have said?

Man Oh Man

DEAR OH MAN,

Let me get this straight. You love your current boyfriend, but you also still love your ex-boyfriend. Torn between two lovers. It's an age-old dilemma.

The easy way out is to ax them both and start from scratch. But if you don't want to do that, here's my advice.

As far as your new boyfriend goes, it sounds like you have some doubts as to his sincerity. You need to judge him on your own terms, but if people have said things to you about him that make you uncomfortable, you can either ignore them or confront him.

If these skeptics are people that you trust, perhaps you should confront your boyfriend about their allegations. You can't build a loving relationship with someone you don't trust. So, getting things out in the open and seeing what he has to say might set your mind at ease.

If you respect what he says to you and believe you can trust him, there's no reason to leave him simply because someone else doesn't trust him. It's you that matters.

But that's only half of the problem.

As far as your ex-boyfriend goes, it sounds like he has already proven himself untrustworthy by cheating on you. If you have forgiven him for his affair and feel like you can trust him again, give that relationship a second try.

But, speaking from experience, it's really hard to have a loving relationship with someone that you don't feel "passionate" about. If you think you can rekindle that passion, I say go for it.

Solving those two problems leaves you with a bigger one. If, after you straighten all this out, someone turns out to be the clear winner of your affections, all is well, at least for a while. But if the both pass with flying colors, I don't know what to tell you.

I truly believe you can love two people at once. So, you can date them both for now. But you can't spend the rest of your life with both of them. Weigh the pros and cons. If you truly love them both, choosing one man over the other may well be one of the hardest decisions you will ever have to make.

The advice presented in this column is solely the opinion of the columnist and does not reflect the opinion of the Collegian or K-State.

Group raises awareness

BACCHUS promotes responsible drinking through education of students

LORI SCHREIBER
Collegian

A new group promoting responsible drinking has been created on campus.

Steve Barnum, sophomore in pre-journalism and mass communications and president of the group, said BACCHUS, which stands for Boost Alcohol Consciousness Concerning the Health of University Students, is an international organization with chapters on nearly 500 campuses.

"BACCHUS doesn't promote abstinence of drinking. It promotes responsible drinking," Barnum said. "We aren't a bunch of people who sit around complaining about drinking."

Roxanne Ayotte, assistant director of alcohol and other drug education services, said BACCHUS has replaced Students Against Drunk Driving.

"SADD had gone defunct in the last few semesters," Ayotte said.

She said the difference between BACCHUS and SADD is that BACCHUS focuses on problems of college students and goes beyond drunken-driving issues.

"There is more to BACCHUS," Ayotte said. "It covers issues like sex under the influence, health issues related to drinking, peer education and how to identify someone with a drinking problem."

The K-State chapter of BACCHUS was started in October 1992. There are five active members in the group, and Barnum said he has gotten a lot of calls from people interested in joining once they find out about the group.

Barnum said the group wants to promote alternative activities to ones that focus on alcoholic beverages.

"Our goal is to educate the University community about the dangers of alcohol and show them how to be responsible about their usage," Barnum said.

BACCHUS was also responsible for the 37 seconds of silence observed during the Nov. 21, 1992, K-State/Oklahoma State Homecoming Football Game. Taps was played during the pre-game show, and then 37 seconds of silence were observed in remembrance of the 37 people between the ages of 18 and 25 who died on Kansas highways in 1991 in alcohol-related traffic accidents.

Barnum said future plans for the group include a membership drive and a Safe Spring Break Campaign.

The campaign will run the week before spring break. There will be information tables set up in the K-State Union and silhouettes of objects around campus with questions on them to prompt students to think about the dangers of excess drinking.

"This campaign is to make it so everyone that leaves for spring break also comes back," Barnum said.

all their lives.

John Skare, an observer for WARN, said he has been watching weather for 19 years.

"It takes a certain breed of person to become a severe weather observer," Skare said. "There are some people who are scared to death by severe weather, and there's no way you can get them out on a hill as a spotter."

Not all of the spotters are veterans, though. About six members of the group are experienced spotters, and 10-12 are in training, Tipping said.

But there is one thing the members have in common.

"Most of us have an actual interest in what's happening with the weather," Tipping said.

WARN members are on call throughout the year.

"These spotters are very dedicated," said Julie Eichem, assistant coordinator for Riley County Emergency Preparedness. "They are usually called out during dinner time, and most of the time they go to their posts for about two hours and nothing happens."

Eichem works in the Emergency Operations Center in Manhattan. She plots the storms and controls the sirens.

"Without these people, we wouldn't know what's going on,"

she said.

The Weather Service in Topeka also relies on WARN spotters to verify their radar reports.

"Riley County has developed a good working relationship with the Weather Service in Topeka," Tipping said.

Because the Weather Service knows Riley County has spotters, they often call the Emergency Operations Center to ask what our spotters see, Eichem said.

"They like to hear from the eyes on the ground," she said.

It is a way for the Weather Service to cross-check radar with what is happening, she said.

"You try to take what someone else is going for before they get there," Johnson said. "There was a lot of stretching, and I'm not too flexible."

The $500 made during the event was given to Manhattan Big Brothers/Big Sisters.

"A lot of the money was made off our sponsorships," said Jeff Laubhan, sophomore in business administration and Theta Xi philanthropy chairman.

Putting possessions in perfect places

Chris Leech and Jason Schroeder, sophomores in architectural engineering, overcame the problem of cramped quarters in their room in the Kappa Sigma fraternity by building additions. The pair spent about $400 to make a bed loft, couch, study area and other improvements.

NICOLLE FOLSOM
Collegian

Cramped quarters are the norm for most college students. Too much stuff and not enough space is a dilemma that plagues students on a regular basis.

Before Jason Schroeder and his roommate Chris Leech, both sophomores in architectural engineering, moved into their room in the Kappa Sigma house, they decided it looked closed in.

Schroeder said he wanted a place to sit and didn't have enough money for a couch. So, he started building.

The finished product was a room that was not only multi-functional but spacious as well.

"We can do anything we want," Schroeder said. "It's an expression thing."

The room is equipped with many of the comforts of home that make various activities possible.

One side of the room is devoted to loft beds that come out from the wall. Schroeder said he decided to put the space underneath them to good use.

"It took a little while to do this," he said.

The area underneath the loft beds was converted into a shelving unit that contains a refrigerator, closet space, drawers, food, medicine, cleaning supplies, clothes and tapes.

Another comfort the room features is raised floors that are carpeted or padded that offer guests a place to sit.

"Raised floors are the most comfortable things in the world," Leech said.

Schroeder said the raised floors are like a modified version of a futon couch, and underneath he allowed room for more storage space.

The floor of the room is cleared due to a few ingenious inventions.

"You've got to look for inconspicuous places to store stuff," Schroeder said.

Stereo speakers are tucked into the corner of the room on a high shelf, and dirty laundry is stored in hampers that are adhered high on the wall near the foot of each bed.

"It's just functional," Schroeder said. "I get a lot of people in here if I want to have a party, and it's easy to clean up."

Schroeder didn't forget room for academics either. He built an eight-shaped desk that accommodates both him and his roommate.

"I don't like staring at the wall when I study," he said.

The formica desk is shaped so Schroeder can view the room while his roommate's portion of the desk faces the other way.

Leech said the room doesn't seem like it is 14 by 18 feet.

"It feels bigger than the other rooms," Leech said.

Schroeder and Leech said they used a lot of lighting and color tricks to make the room appear larger than it actually was.

Most of the lights in the room are hidden behind things. So Schroeder and Leech get the light they need without the clutter of the bulbs showing.

Schroeder said the lumber, paint, carpeting and light fixtures for the entire room cost about $400.

Kristin Herrick, junior in art therapy, faces similar space restrictions in Ford Hall.

Although Herrick resides in a private room, she has enough belongings to challenge the space she has.

"The best idea is to get organizers and to maximize your closet space," she said. "I think you can really maximize if you work at it."

One of Herrick's biggest needs for space is her art supplies. She built her own closet dividers to organize the supplies and other items.

Her father also provided more space by designing a bunk bed with an attached desk underneath that Herrick uses to store a computer, printer, television and VCR.

She also has space in her room for Coupon sales lead to arrest

A number of Gift Books, fraudulent books of coupons that were supposedly valid until April 30, 1993, were sold to unsuspecting Manhattan residents last spring.

Sales of the book were said to benefit Manhattan Big Brothers/Big Sisters. Instead, the money left town, and those who bought a coupon book were left with $30 less in their pockets.

Gwyn Crumplar, executive director of Manhattan Big Brothers/Big Sisters, said she was upset at the bad publicity they had received from the incident. She said it was not the organization's fault.

"We didn't have anything to do with it," Crumplar said.

She said Big Brothers/Big Sisters was completely unaware of the situation until she began to receive phone calls from people who had purchased the book and were not able to redeem the coupons. She also received calls from angry merchants who knew nothing of the coupons. Crumplar then contacted the Kansas Attorney General.

"We didn't realize they were telling people they were Big Brothers and Big Sisters," she said.

Mary Horsch, press secretary for the Kansas attorney general, said a civil lawsuit was filed against Sherry Evans of Osage Beach, Mo., for violating the Kansas Consumer Protection Act. Evans had not worked alone, but she was the one responsible, Horsch said.

"We alleged that she was deceptive in saying proceeds were going to Big Brothers and Big Sisters," Horsch said. "People bought the book because they thought it was going to a good cause."

In December 1992, a consent judgment was reached where Evans would give refunds to those who purchased the books and pay $1,000 investigative fees to the Kansas attorney general, Horsch said.

Consumers desiring a refund must return the coupon book and provide proof they did not use a single coupon, Horsch said.

"They need to call the office and find out if they would qualify for a refund," Horsch said.

Terry Wheeler, senior in marketing, said he bought the book because he thought it was for Big Brothers/Big Sisters.

"Somebody called and talked and gave me this big old sales pitch," Wheeler said. "After about 10 or 15 minutes, I finally said OK."

Wheeler said the person on the phone was a good salesman. As soon as Wheeler agreed to buy a coupon book, it was delivered right away.

"About five minutes later, he was knocking on my door and wanting the money," Wheeler said.

Dianne Urban, K-State students' attorney, said she could not be sure of the legal obligations of the merchants without reading the case. However, she said merchants probably are not required to honor the coupons.

"My inclination is that the merchants would not be liable," Urban said.

Tisha McCondlless, owner of Southern Sun, Sun Connection and Tropical Tan, said her businesses are not honoring the coupons.

"The coupons in this book were never authorized," McCondlless said.

McCondlless said she had placed coupons in a legitimate book two years ago for Big Brothers/Big Sisters.

"We only wanted to do it for the first year in business," McCondlless said. "The second year we didn't have anything to do with it."

Brenda Bauman, a former K-State student who purchased a coupon book last year, said she was upset after she spent the money to buy the book and certain merchants would not honor it.

"The merchants don't realize they're punishing the people who bought the book, not the ones who skipped out with the money," Bauman said.

However, many merchants listed in the coupon book know of the deception and are still honoring the coupons.

Alyce Whalen, manager of the Cottonwood Racquet Club, said she will continue to honor the coupons, hoping to gain exposure for the club.

"I felt it was nothing out of our pockets," Whalen said. "They are the ones who got gyped."

Whalen said a lady came in to her to ask about placing coupons in this book. The lady presented herself as though she was with Manhattan Big Brothers/Big Sisters. Whalen said she should have asked the lady for identification.

"She had a sales pitch," Whalen said. "She was good."

Whalen said she is now leery of salesmen.

"Now, boy do I ask the questions when people sell us stuff," Whalen said.

Students and people in the military were the ones targeted because they are particularly impressionable, Whalen said.

"I feel for them," Whalen said. "I wasn't the only one who was duped — everybody was."

Criminals to face new sentencing

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HUTCHINSON — New sentencing guidelines that would radically change the way Kansas punishes its criminals are due to take effect July 1.

Criminals who use violence against their victims would generally go to prison, while crimes involving only property would result in probation.

The idea behind the proposed guidelines is to stop lying to the public about sentencing, Reno County Attorney Tim Chambers said. Instead of rehabilitation, the guidelines are designed to take the most violent criminals out of action by locking them up, he said.

"We're going to be more truthful when we tell people someone's going to prison," Chambers said.

The current system sentences most offenders to minimum and maximum terms. While sentences of two to 10 years or 10 to 20 years sound long, most offenders end up on probation or leave prison early, Chambers said.

Criminals would be required to serve at least 80 percent of their sentences, Bill Miskell, Department of Corrections spokesman, said. The only way to serve less than 100 percent would be credit for good behavior, he said.

But the guidelines are still being fine-tuned as designers try to satisfy lawmakers, and prosecutors worried that the guidelines may be too lenient.

For example, aggravated assault and aggravated battery would be punished only by probation under the current proposal.

"Yes, there's concern," said Helen Pedigo, acting executive director of the Kansas Sentencing Commission, which designed the new system.

"So, we're reviewing it, and they probably will be moved up higher in severity level, or a special rule will be made. ..."

Pedigo said.

Konza Prairie studies effects of fire, grazing

DAVE OLSON

The Konza Prairie Research Natural Area has been awarded $540,000 to continue studying the effects of fire and grazing.

John Briggs, assistant scientist in the Division of Biology, said the study is designed to help understand long-term ecological effects on the Konza Prairie.

"Every day we learn quite a bit more," Briggs said.

The Konza Prairie, 8,616 acres of land south of Manhattan, is owned by the Nature Conservancy and is leased to K-State for research purposes.

Researchers from the Division of Biology and the departments of plant pathology, civil engineering, geology and agronomy are working on the fire and grazing project.

Briggs said fire is important in maintaining the tallgrass prairie.

"In certain areas, there is enough moisture that if you don't burn, the area will be invaded by trees and shrubs," he said.

To study the effects of fire, Briggs said the researchers will burn various areas of the prairie at different intervals. Some portions will be burned every year, while others may wait 10 years.

Alan Knapp, assistant professor of biology, said the study is uncovering important information about grazing habits as well.

"We have made tremendous progress in determining the impact of bison on the Konza," he said.

The grant for the study, which is funded by the National Science Foundation, must be renewed every five or six years. The project is currently in its third cycle of funding.

World unity goal of poetry contest

LAURA HEIDE
Collegian

A poetry contest titled "Bringing the World Closer Together" is being sponsored by KSDB-FM 91.9 and the International Coordinating Council.

"The purpose of the contest is to promote a greater understanding of the dynamic changes occurring throughout the world," said Kouassi Kouakou, graduate student in grain science and host of the DB92 show "Into Africa."

There are five entry levels in the contest: elementary, middle school, high school, college and community. There is an entry fee, and the poem should be 500 words or fewer.

Entry forms for the contest are available at the Student Governing Association office, the Dean of Student Life office, Manhattan Town Center and various schools in town. The entry deadline is March 15.

"Anyone can enter. You can compete against your own peers, regardless of what your education is," Joe Montgomery, general manager of DB92, said.

Winners will be offered three cash prizes at each level. First-place winners will receive $91.90, second-place winners get $50, and third-place winners are awarded $25.

"The winners will receive their cash prize at the closing banquet of International Week," Kouakou said.

"DB92 will be broadcasting live at the banquet and will announce the winners. The poems will then be read on the air during 'Into Africa' on April 18."

Kouakou said the poems will also be enlarged and displayed at Manhattan Town Center and the K-State Union.

Various people and organizations have donated money for the contest, including President Jon Wefald's office and Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement. The athletic department, the Manhattan Association of Christian and Jewish Congregations and Susan Scott, associate dean of student life, were also contributors.

Kouakou said he came up with the idea of having a poetry contest literally overnight.

"I then realized that ICC, an organization that blends together all international groups here at K-State, would be a good entity to help us," he said.

"Seventy-five percent of 'Into Africa' is African and African-related music," Kouakou said.

"The rest is composed of different segments — African recipes, a travel log, the children's corner and the African file."

Every other week, during children's corner, 11-year-old Tomika Gile from Marlatt School reads poems about Africa.

"Actually, we created this segment to show how children play a very important part in our life in Africa," Kouakou said.

"Whatever we have to do, we always have room for children."

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

You scratch my back. ...

THE ISSUE

Gov. Finney's attempt to get Ruth Schrum on the Kansas Board of Regents smacked of patronage.

It's an age-old ploy.

Gain power and then push all your buddies into top-ranking positions. Keep the odds on your side.

Not entirely fair, yet very effective. This plan has been recently used by Gov. Joan Finney. Our trusted governor has a lot of friends, and if you happen to be one of them, there may be a place for you on one or more state boards.

A recent example involved Ruth Schrum, a retired teacher and current Manhattan property owner and manager. Finney attempted to appoint Schrum to the Kansas Board of Regents.

Her attempts failed, however, due to lack of legislative support for Schrum.

Finney reportedly feels very bad, not only because she feels Schrum is qualified, but also because they are such good friends.

The most obvious problem here is that when none but the governor's acquaintances find their way into top spots, the rest of us are left out in the cold.

The less obvious problem, however, is that when opposing viewpoints are not allowed to clash, the powers-that-be become stagnant, and nothing much gets done.

If Finney can find none but her best friends to fill top state positions, we question the scores of qualified candidates who are overlooked.

Then there is always the question: "What happens when she runs out of friends?"

Jim

Silently, politely, without a complaint — so like himself — Jim has evaporated from the pages of the Collegian. I think that's a shame.

For 2 1/2 years now, I have relied on the comforting monotony of Jim's Journal to provide relief from my own hectic schedule. Every day, there was Jim, predictable, uncomplicated, an emblem of stability in an unstable world. And last semester, I could count on Jim to restore a sense of peace and balance each time I felt like strangling John Hart.

Hal, Tony, Ruth, Steve, Mr.

Peterson — all gone.

Why?

Budget, the editors tell me, had something to do with it. More important, though, was student reaction. K-State students, they tell me, just didn't like the strip.

Actually, I wasn't so very surprised. As I left the Collegian office, I began to remember all those times I had defended "Jim's" to my composition students.

"It's stupid," they would say. "It's not funny."

"Nothing happens," they said, often angrily.

"Of course not," I said. "That's the point."

Jim's few proponents tended to be those students who sat on the periphery of my classroom, who said little and looked self-consciously at their desks.

So, it's not surprising we lost Jim's. But it does remind me of a theory I've developed about people who claim they "don't get" Jim's Journal: They are afraid to admit that their lives might be as boring and unimportant as Jim's. This, I believe, is why my students' dislike of Jim's Journal was often emotional, even angry.

Jim's oh-so-forgettable life — and the strip's unspoken assumption that Jim's life is typical of the one we all lead — clearly threatens our dearly-held notions of self-importance. By "self-importance" I do not mean self-respect. I mean an overwrought sense of self-importance we seem to have developed in the 1980s, which has us taking ourselves altogether too seriously and moving through our lives as if every word and action is the stuff of epic poems.

The '80s gave us Poison, Van Halen and Motley Crue, bands whose lyrics increasingly defined sentimentality and just plain dumbness, but whom we took more seriously with each album. Schwarzenegger's vacuous one-liners and Stallone's overacted gunslinging seemed to us to say something truthful about the world, to supply a philosophy we could apply in our lives. Only in the '80s could we have taken a redneck car like the IROC-Z seriously.

Let's call this phenomenon of self-importance and seriousness the "Trump Mentality."

The Trump Mentality is characterized above all by the loss of ability to see ourselves with irony. We've forgotten that we are sometimes laughable. It's the Trump Mentality that makes otherwise sensible men walk through Aggieville in the dead of winter with no coats, their elbows aimed outward to make their chests appear larger, daring you to brush them as you pass — the whole time taking themselves entirely seriously. Tony, Jim's roommate, with all his get-rich-quick schemes and faith in assertiveness, was a manifestation of the Trump Mentality.

It is above all the Trump Mentality — we could also call this, and we have, the "me generation" — that Jim's Journal challenged. Tony represented that all-important "Me," the unique individual at the center of the American '80s universe. Jim, on the other hand, represented what is collective about us, what is shared and common to us as Americans: the copy stores, the fast food restaurants, the alarm clocks that ring too early and make us feel stupid, the moments of ungainly malaise and insignificance we'd rather not remember.

The most unglamorous and dismaying fact about Jim, of course, is that he's a college graduate with a job in a copy store. No, there's nothing glamorous about Jim. But in a contemporary America, where Jim's experience is increasingly the defining one for the twenty-something generation, there is plenty that's accurate in the strip. This is perhaps the most difficult hurdle for college students who resist "getting" Jim's: admitting they understand it means accepting a view of America that is not only starkly and depressingly realistic, but one that threatens to invalidate the very idea of college itself.

The title of the first Jim's Journal collection is "I went to College and it was Okay." But the possibility that college might just be "Okay" understandably disturbs us. Rather than face the idea, we protest that it makes no sense until the newspaper obligingly removes the offending strip from our eyesight. Another triumph for higher education.

To those of us who "understood" Jim's, all these attempts to poke fun at Jim's Journal only proved what they sought to disprove: that Jim's Journal has a cultural and aesthetic relevance that cannot be explained or imitated away, a relevance reflected by the emotional nature of the response from both those who like, and those who dislike, the strip.

Evolution plagued by dogma

"In the beginning there was hydrogen. After a few billion years and countless random mutations, chance created man." This is a fact; the theory of evolution. Charles Darwin promulgated this teaching in the 19th century. Although many variations of the theory of evolution abound today, the core belief that basic elements formed the first amino acids, which in turn developed into current species through natural selection, remains intact. Modern science, however, treats evolution not as a theory but as orthodoxy and 'fact'.

More than ever before scientists and theologians are trying to find harmony between the two apparently divergent views of divine creation and evolution. Creation and evolution, in a very general sense, are not inherently in conflict. Yet evolution that is not divinely inspired, the mainstream view of evolution, is very much in conflict with any idea of special creation. The only harmony between creation and evolution are the unmistakable sounds of doctrine.

While arguing against the teaching of creationism alongside evolution, Marvin Harris, anthropologist wrote in his textbook, Cultural Anthropology, "There are still people who believe that the Earth is flat. Should their views be given equal time in an astronomy class?"

With this rhetorical question Harris dogmatically implies that evolution is fact in the same sense as the roundness of the Earth is a fact and equates "people who still believe the Earth is flat" with "people who still believe in creation." The Earth is very round.

Pictures from satellites show the Earth to be a sphere. If you sail due east you will eventually return to your starting point. The Earth is round; we are certain of that fact.

Evolution, on the other hand, is not a "fact," like the roundness of the Earth, and to treat it as a "fact" requires willful intellectual deception because evolution can never be proved to be a "fact." Creation and evolution both deal with origin science where the events that occurred in the past are impossible to repeat today, unlike operation science where an experiment involving sailing around a spherical Earth, for example, can be repeated many times. According to Ray Bohlin, Ph.D. in molecular biology, all one can do is assemble the evidence for the event (i.e. the appearances of humans on Earth) and construct a plausible scenario or hypothesis. Evolution is not and never can be a fact of science.

Treating evolution as a fact is not only defective in a legal context but also in a scientific context. If species gradually became more complex through time, evidence of transitional creatures should be abundant in the fossil record. The evidence doesn't exist. There's a huge gap in the fossil record. The explanations evolutionists have offered for this gap fail to provide any solid evidence for their hypothesis.

"The fossils that decorate our family tree are so scarce that there are still more scientists than specimens ... all the physical evidence we have for human evolution can still be placed, with room to spare, inside a single coffin," Dr. Lyall Watson wrote in Science Digest.

Also, most evolutionists believe that the building blocks of life are formed by chance. Gerald L. Schroeder, Ph.D. in physics, calculated that to reach a probable condition that a single protein might have developed by chance, we would need 10 to the 110th trials to have been completed each second since the start of time. We have never observed complex life form by chance — never.

The ferocity with which evolutionists defend their hypothesis is a strong signal that, for many of them, THE FACT of evolution is not an arrangement of sterile scientific data but the foundation of their naturalistic or atheistic world views. For the atheist and secular humanist, evolution is a philosophical necessity — to admit that life is not the product of chance or random mutations but of intelligent design would destroy their belief systems.

"Evolution has made atheism appear more respectable," Michael Denton, an Australian Ph.D in microbiology.

I've often wondered why physicists don't get angry and emotional when the Bohr atomic model, a scientific theory like evolution, is questioned? Because the Bohr model is not at the core of a religion masked under the guise of science. Evolution can be treated as fact, but only as an exercise of faith.

Brad may be a closet Christian and fooling us all

Editor,

We're a little worried about your columnist who we've been reading for a number of years — Brad Seabourn. Well, actually more worried about his family. Oh, we're not as concerned about the values he is instilling upon them as we are concerned about if they're going to have any food on their table or a roof over their heads.

You see, we just don't know how Brad is going to get a real job as a columnist at a real newspaper if all he can write about is one subject. Maybe he could write for some little atheist newsletter or something. Of course, they may not pay him with anything that says "In God We Trust" on it. Bummer.

Actually, maybe he could make a good preacher. Look at Jimmy Swaggart. By day, all he was talking about was not sinning, not fornicating, etc... By night he was visiting the Super 8 Motel with what he might biblically call a "harlot." Brad shows the same extremes. Brad may actually be the antithesis of Swaggart and be sneaking off to church — a closet Christian.

Finally, please ask Jimmy, er, Brad to check his definition of "guilt." Guilt is not a negative emotion, but rather a motivator for change. I think he was trying to mean "shame," which implies low self-esteem.

Letter represents a slap to women everywhere

Editor,

We are writing in response to Heather Anderson's letter that appeared in the March 2 Collegian. We comprise part of the pitiful group Anderson referred to as the "underappreciated coffee-fetching" secretaries of K-State.

Anderson might be surprised to find that we do not view ourselves to be in such bad situations when assessing our careers. We have not been relegated to subservient roles and view Anderson's opinion of our careers revolting. Don't pity us for choosing to be secretaries. Believe it or not, we enjoy challenging and stimulating careers.

We do, however, pity Anderson. It's too bad that she thinks it's OK to degrade all women by participating in "beauty" pageants under the guise of qualifying for scholarship money to save herself from the "pits of hell" reserved for secretaries and waitresses.

As far as we are concerned, she will remain on the bottom-most rung of decency because of the flagrant disregard she has for the sanctity of female sexuality and the poor image of women she puts forth that we, as her sisters, have to fight against every day.

If it's money she wants, why not just pose for Playboy? She would get a lot more money and wouldn't be denigrating the status of women in society any worse than she already has.

Even if pageants are just an "easy target for trendy PC-ers," we can accept that. At least the issues of sexism and the cheapening of human sexuality are being discussed.

So, in the future, Anderson should save her superiority complex for another arena. She has embarrassed and enraged a very important group on this campus and has given all women a cold slap in the face with her actions.

RESPONSE

Economic solutions are relative to statistics

Editor,

As majors in economics, we could not let Brian Sweatland's flawed reasoning of March 4 go unchallenged. In his letter, he said Clinton should take "some economic lessons" from Latin America, especially Argentina.

Argentina? Argentina may be a wonderful country, but you simply cannot compare its economy to ours. A few statistics illustrate this fact. Its population is only 30 million, 12 percent of ours. Its workforce is 11 million, 9 percent of ours. Its GDP is about $66 billion, 1 percent of ours.

Argentina started from rock bottom in the 1980s. Its economy was in pitiful shape with an annual inflation of more than 340 percent and huge foreign debts. Clearly, what worked for that economy will not necessarily work for ours.

As a matter of fact, Clinton does not need to take lessons from anyone on his deficit-reduction package. The plan he has proposed is credible in its own right. The reaction in the bond market can attest to this fact. Long-term interest rates have fallen to record lows. The Clinton plan is the most credible deficit-reduction plan presented in the last 12 years.

Baseball Cats to face No. 8 Wichita State

Shocker coach says K-State has advantage

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

The Wildcats may be catching national power Wichita State at a good time for their 7 p.m. game today at Frank Myers Field — on the heels of a 12-11 loss to Northwestern.

The Shockers, ranked eighth in the nation, scored six runs in the last two innings but couldn't catch up to Northwestern.

"That's going to help K-State, no question about it," said Shocker coach Gene Stephenson, who has an 854-261 record in 16 years at Wichita State.

"K-State is playing well, and they're excited about the prospect of playing Wichita State. They're coming in with a lot of confidence. We're coming in with no confidence."

Indeed, the Wildcats are fresh off a 21-6 win over Emporia Sunday afternoon. In that game, 13 Wildcats scored and nine more drove in runs.

It evened K-State's record at 3-3 for the season. Wichita State is 6-2.

Wildcat coach Mike Clark said that despite the loss to Northwestern, a team that was 18-38 a year ago, the Shockers will be pumped up for tonight's game.

"We know they're going to be fired up and ready to play," Clark said. "It doesn't matter if they lost by 50 runs — they'll be ready."

"Coach Stephenson will have his team jacked up for this game."

But Stephenson wasn't so sure. "There's only one team that's going to be jacked up about playing this game," he said. "And we all know who that's going to be. Everybody that plays Wichita State, it's the game of their season. If they win this, it makes their whole season."

Wildcat first baseman Brian Morrow is a transfer from Wichita State. He reiterated the point that this game will not be of much significance to the Shockers.

"When I was playing there, I always felt like no matter who we played, it was going to make their season if they beat us," he said.

"And that's regardless of what they did the rest of the season."

"But I never liked to play K-State because I knew they were the type of team that could score a lot of runs."

K-State's team batting average is .314. Morrow is doing his part, batting .579 with one home run. His nine RBIs are second only to Brian Culp's 10.

The Wildcats have scored 10 runs or more in three of their six games. And the Cats are scoring an average of nine runs a game.

Indeed, it's the Wildcat pitching — not the hitting — that has Clark worried.

"I'm concerned about that," he said. "We're getting behind too many hitters, and we're walking too many hitters."

Through the Cats' first six games, K-State has given up more than five free passes every time out. The team earned run average is a balmy 7.06. Both may be huge factors in tonight's game, for the Shockers' team batting average is .326.

And K-State's starting pitcher tonight, transfer Robert Merriman (1-0), walked six batters in six innings in his first start, an 11-3 win over Northern Iowa.

"That's going to happen once in a while," Merriman said. "It's still early."

"But with Wichita State's caliber of hitting, if you throw a pitch up there just hoping to get a strike, you're going to get knocked around the yard."

For K-State, the game is just one of many against national powers. The Wildcats embark on a week-long road trip to the West coast next Sunday with games against Fresno State, Arizona and Clemson.

And Stephenson said he knows the Wildcats will be hungry to topple the Shockers in tonight's game and Wednesday's contest between the same two teams in Wichita.

"I fully expect K-State to come into these games expecting a sweep," Stephenson said. "I'm sure their fans will be out in full force — whatever there are of them."

Warthogs top Phi Delts for all-University title

RON LACKEY
Collegian

The FHJCC Warthogs defeated Phi Delta Theta 73-63 for the all-University basketball title in a bizarre championship game.

Phi Delts played against Phi Delts. The crowd was quiet, players comically made room for opponents to slam the ball, and no one seemed to know what FHJCC stood for.

The FHJCC Warthogs were made up of independent players and Phi Delts.

"I am a Phi Delt, and I had to play my alma mater," Lane Patterson, member of the Warthogs, said.

"We knew those guys pretty well. We really matched up with them. Both teams played good."

"We just wore them down. We are a running team, and since they just had six guys, we ran them down," Patterson said. "They just couldn't keep up."

Patterson said the strength of his team was tough defense.

"We've had to play tough defense all year," he said. "We really don't have an offense. So, our defense had to lead our season. Our defense was definitely the key."

Indeed, the Warthogs limited the Phi Delts to 45 percent shooting from the floor, including 32 percent from three-point range.

On the other hand, the Warthogs' shooting percentage was 52 percent, and they connected on 43 percent of their freys.

Patterson, who made two of his five three-pointers and finished with nine points, said playing for the opposing team was strange.

"I got heckled a lot," he said of the "traitor" chants he had to endure in the earlygoing of the game. "It was strange playing against my friends."

Brad Sonner, a guard for the Warthogs, said the crowd was subdued.

"The crowd was a lot quieter than I thought it would be," he said. "It was strange, having guys on both teams. And being a Monday night didn't help."

Despite the loss, the Phi Delt crowd had reason to cheer late in the game.

With only seconds left to play — and the game securely in hand for the Warthogs — all the players cleared a lane to allow Phi Delt Bill Hirschler drive to the basket uncontested and slam it home. The Phi Delt crowd finally cheered.

"Since it was my roommate's team, and they were up by so many points, they kind of cleared the way and let me through," said Hirschler, who led the Phi Delts with 21 points and six rebounds.

Hirschler agreed with his opponents on the outcome of the game.

"It was a good game," he said. "It was tough, and we were too tired to catch up."

The game was over and the question still remained — what did FHJCC mean?

"FHJCC really doesn't stand for anything," Brad Sonner of the Warthogs said. "They were misprints from Ballard's, and we just put numbers on the shirts."

Cat lacrosse team opens season with 10-6 win over Kansas City

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

The K-State Lacrosse team kicked off its season by defeating Kansas City 10-6 Saturday.

Midfielder Scott Forkenbrock led the team with three goals, and attacker Tondo Waldron added two.

Forkenbrock said the team started out slow but improved quickly.

"It took us a while to get going, but once we got going our defense did well," he said. "Kansas City has always been good in the past, and we beat them solidly."

Midfielders Jeremiah Ryden, Rob Hileman, Tyler Simpson, Dan Higgins, and attacker Chris Frigg all added one goal apiece.

Lacrosse coach Curt Thurman said the defense played well, even though Kansas City scored two goals in the first minutes of the game.

"Overall, we played great," he said. "Everyone played as a team, and that's what I stress in practice. Our goalie, Jeff Boos, did a good job."

Thurman also said Rob Bullock — playing in his first-ever game — played an important role on defense.

Last spring, the Wildcat Lacrosse team finished fourth in the Final Four in the Great Plains Lacrosse League, and fourth for the season.

Thurman said the setup of the tournament is similar to the NCAA Final Four basketball tournament in that it is single elimination.

He said he feels confident the team could possibly go undefeated this season.

"I'm hoping we go undefeated," he said. "I don't know why we won't, because we don't rely on any one individual."

"We have talent and people to do it. We're setting goals high, but I feel they are attainable."

Thurman said 23 out of 60 players are new this year, and many of them have never played lacrosse.

"A lot of them are playing after their first semester on the team, and a lot of them are good athletes," he said.

The Wildcat lacrosse team will face Wichita State at 1:30 Sunday afternoon at Memorial Stadium.

SPORTS DIGEST

► CONE FALLS 4-0 IN 1ST START

HAINES CITY, Fla. (AP) — David Cone made his first exhibition start for Kansas City Monday and pitched well in the Royals' 4-0 loss to the Baltimore Orioles.

Cone, signed as a free agent for $18 million over three years, took the loss. He gave up one hit and one run in three innings, striking out two.

The right-hander walked two in the second inning, and Harold Baines scored when Tim Lincecum grounded into a double play with the bases loaded.

The Royals fell to 0-4 in exhibition play.

► ELWAY SIGNS FOR $20 MILLION

DENVER (AP) — John Elway is getting four more years to win a Super Bowl for the Denver Broncos, who gave him a reported $20 million Monday to lead them to that elusive championship.

The deal, reported by two Denver TV stations, would make Elway the NFL's highest-paid player, passing Miami's Dan Marino, who last year signed a five-year, $22 million contract.

While contract terms were not released, television reports said the contract that will take Elway through 1996, his 14th year with Denver, was worth about $20 million.

► KANSAS WINS BIG 8 TOURNNEY

SALINA (AP) — Lisa Tate blocked a shot from Nebraska's Nafeesah Brown that would have tied the game with nine seconds remaining Monday night to lift Kansas to a 64-60 victory in the championship game of the Big Eight women's tournament.

Kansas (21-8) earned an automatic berth to the NCAA tournament, while No. 20 Nebraska (22-7) must wait until Sunday to see if it will get an at-large bid.

Angela Aycock scored 25 points and grabbed 10 rebounds to lead Kansas. She was named the tournament's most valuable player.

► JETS SIGN VETERAN LOTT

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. (AP) — The New York Jets signed star free agent Ronnie Lott to fill a hole in their secondary.

Lott, a 10-time Pro Bowl performer and six-time All-Pro, brings sorely needed veteran leadership to a young team that slipped from a playoff berth in 1991 to 4-12 last season.

Lott, who earned $1 million last season when he led the Los Angeles Raiders with 103 tackles, signed a two-year deal. Terms were not disclosed, but it is believed the 12-year veteran who turns 34 in May signed for close to $3 million.

Cult leader
'ready for war'

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WACO, Texas — A heavily armed cult's leader seems eager to provoke another gunfight to fulfill his apocalyptic prophecies, telling negotiators "We are ready for war," and "Let's get it on," the FBI said Monday.

As the cult's standoff with hundreds of lawmen ground through its ninth day, FBI spokesman Bob Ricks disclosed details of telephone conversations negotiators have had with David Koresh and more than 30 followers.

Koresh claims to have explosives that would blow the FBI's Bradley armored personnel carriers "40 or 50 feet into the air." So, the agency on Monday moved in several 67-ton Abrams main battle tanks for protection, the spokesman said. He said they would be unarmed and strictly for defense.

Koresh said he has been prepared for a fight since 1985, and some of his followers said they are ready to follow him to their deaths, Ricks said.

Koresh and his followers battled with federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms agents for nearly an hour on Feb. 28, killing four agents and wounding 16. Ten cult members also may have died. Koresh refuses to tell negotiators how many are dead.

Since the shootout, hundreds of law enforcement officers have surrounded the 77-acre Mount Carmel compound about 10 miles east of Waco.

Ricks said negotiators and Koresh agreed for the cult to conduct a funeral and bury the body of one cult member killed in the shootout. The identity was being withheld until relatives were notified.

Tape shot by CBS-TV just before noon Monday showed three men digging a grave under a tree on the compound's front lawn. About 30 minutes later, the three men went to a van, pulled out what appeared to be a large body wrapped in a bag, placed it in the grave, and covered it with dirt. There was no ceremony.

In the negotiations, Koresh keeps changing his mind, Ricks said. He initially was offended by reports that he considered himself Christ. But in telephone conversations focusing on Bible studies, Ricks said, "We are now getting a message that it is probably much more than him just being a prophet. He is probably a messiah, and he is here to fulfill the prophecies."

"It's our belief that he believes that his prophecy will be fulfilled if the government engages in an all-out firefight with him in which he is executed," Ricks said.

"He has made such statements as, 'We are ready for war.' 'Let's get it on.' 'Your talk is becoming in vain.' 'I'm going to give you the opportunity to save yourselves before you get blown away,'" Ricks said.

Nevertheless, negotiations continued with Koresh, he said. The FBI official said negotiators have talked with 33 people inside the compound.

"Those that we spoke with on each occasion verified that Mr. Koresh had indicated that these individuals were free to leave at any time. And we got confirmation that they were staying there on their own free will."

Search could lead to warrants

Salameh confronts guards, workers approach bomb center
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — More search warrants, and possibly more arrest warrants, could be issued this week in the World Trade Center bombing investigation, the FBI said Monday.

Also Monday, a federal law enforcement source said investigators have identified a number of associates of Mohammed Salameh, 25, who is being held without bail on charges he helped bomb the trade center on Feb. 26.

"We hope these people will be able to provide us with information on Salameh and perhaps lead us to others as well," said the source, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

James Fox, assistant director in charge of the New York FBI office, said he expected more search warrants and possibly more arrest warrants to be issued, but he wouldn't elaborate.

The bombing killed five people, injured more than 1,000 and closed the twin 110-story towers — the world's second-largest buildings — for at least a month.

In other developments:

—FBI agents, in a weekend raid, reportedly seized documents from the Attica state prison cell of El Sayyid Nosair, held on charges connected to the 1990 killing of radical Rabbi Meir Kahane.

They were looking for correspondence between Nosair and Salameh, the Buffalo News reported.

A state Correctional Services spokesman, citing privacy laws, had no comment on a report that Salameh had often visited Nosair in prison.

Nosair is a cousin of Ibrahim Elgabrowny, who was arrested for allegedly assaulting two FBI agents when they raided his Brooklyn apartment. Salameh listed Elgabrowny's address on a rental application for a van used in the bombing.

—Salameh was involved in a minor physical confrontation with guards at the federal Metropolitan Correctional Center on Monday morning, his lawyer, Robert Precht, said. Salameh got into an argument with guards he didn't think were treating him right when they gave him underwear that was too large and socks that were too small.

ABC News reported that Salameh suffered cuts and bruises. Precht said he wasn't seriously injured.

After talking with jail officials, Precht said, he was confident Salameh's treatment would improve, and he would be given writing materials and a copy of the Koran, as he has requested.

Prison officials refused to pass along to a prison spokesman a request for comment on the incident and U.S. Attorney Roger Hayes said he hadn't heard of the altercation.

—Workers beneath the trade center continued to inch into the five-story-deep blast crater.

"When they finally get in there, they're going to look like a colony of ants going after sugar," Fox said.

But it will be at least 25 days before workers remove 2,500 tons of debris and reach the bottom of the crater, said Gene Fasullo, an engineer with the Port Authority, which owns the trade center.

"We hope these people will be able to provide us with information on Salameh and perhaps lead us to others as well."

Environmental major available

Concern for planet, interest of faculty, job availability prompt course offerings

JENNIFER SWANSON

Collegian

About 60 students have taken advantage of K-State's Natural Resources and Environmental Science option to increase diversification in the environmental area.

These students are able to add the environmental major in addition to the major they already have.

The option, which was added last fall, allows students to add a true understanding of environmental issues to any existing major on campus, Steve Thien, professor of agronomy, said.

Thien is also the director of an interdisciplinary governing board selected from natural resources and environmental sciences faculty.

The option was administered in part because some faculty members were concerned the University was not offering any environmental majors, Thien said.

"The University was not offering any of these majors, but there were a lot of students interested and a lot of jobs available in these areas."

Kevin Wiltse, sophomore in agronomy, said he enrolled in the NRES option because he thought it would go along well with his primary major.

"I am interested in soil quality and protecting the environment. I do research on soil quality with Dr. Thien, and that got me interested," Wiltse said.

The NRES option provides extra qualifications for employment by enhancing the value of the primary major, Thien said.

Other universities have environmental majors, Thien said, but students weren't getting enough depth to get a job.

"K-State's program allows students to get depth in their primary major and breadth in the interdisciplinary option," Thien said.

Wiltse said he thinks he will have an easier time finding a job because this program will allow him to become more diversified.

"I'll have a lot broader knowledge of the environment, and I think that the natural resources option goes very well with agronomy," Wiltse said.

The NRES option is open to all undergraduate students, and all required courses can be taken concurrently with the student's primary major.

Regulator dislikes restroom poets

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I make my way around this campus and quite often find my way to the restrooms as well. You could call me regular, proudly regular.

Anyway, what I find common to men's restrooms is the graffiti. It is crude and rude and sick. I don't care to read these obscenities, not that I intend to while I'm there. Why can't people grow up? Who cares what some desperate S.O.B. thinks about the University of Kansas? I know they're snobby geeks anyway — I don't need to read it anywhere.

Who are the poets who can't spell and are in college? These people need lives. We pay for the cleanup of these things anyway, don't we? Maybe "High" (March 4) was right about the chalkboard in all restroom stalls. Or at least notepads and pencils. That way, the sickening penis, vagina and homosexual messages could be erased.

Some elevators in residence halls face this same thing. To those responsible, if you must advertise your sexual preferences or practice your unpoetic skills, use another form of media, such as the personals.

Have a nice day!

Regulator

DEAR REGULATOR,

I don't know what strange force makes people think they need to scrawl offensive messages on public property.

In fairness to our peers to the east, I think the term "snobby geeks" is a bit unfair.

Perhaps restroom chalkboards or other erasable surfaces would be a solution. In fact, this might be a good business opportunity for you.

New sentencing guidelines change crime punishments guidelines would stack up against the existing system, Pedigo's commission examined 3,825 cases from 1989.

It found 32 percent of criminals in those cases went to prison. Under the proposed sentencing grid, 28 percent of the criminals would have been jailed.

Other findings from that study:

■ Now, 31 percent of serious drug offenders go to prison. The new grid would more than double that, to 70 percent.

■ Now, 66 percent of criminals convicted of second-degree murder, rape and crimes against people go to prison. The grid would put 100 percent behind bars.

■ Now, 36 percent of criminals who commit burglary and other serious property crimes go to prison. The grid would drop that by almost half, to 19 percent.

The proposed guidelines would generally treat sex crimes against children more harshly. Anyone convicted of selling drugs would go to prison, except for first offenses involving small amounts of marijuana, Pedigo said.

A judge would decide a sentence using an actual grid that matched the crime against prior criminal record. Designers said this would make sentences more uniform statewide, and remove racial and income inequities.

Sentences could not be appealed unless a judge departed from the grid.

Chambers predicted the public will not like the grid if it would allow burglars and thieves to dodge prison time.

"It's going to be extremely difficult to get individuals into prison who commit property crimes," Chambers said.

a dorm-sized refrigerator and a microwave.

Herrick did most of her decorating three years ago as a freshman, and she spent about $250.

"It's my little house. It's just like a very compact apartment without a bathroom," Herrick said. "It's amazing what you can do with a 12-by-14 room."

Many students find themselves turning to futons as a way to remedy lack of space. Futons can be folded up to resemble a couch or laid out as a bed.

"They like them because they are really comfortable, cheap and easy to move," Bill Kaszer, manager of the Futon Store, said. "A lot of customers stop in and tell us how much they like them."

Futons start at $150, and Kaszer said futon mattresses can be covered in between 200 and 300 styles of fabric. Once the fabric is on, it is extremely easy to remove and wash or replace.

"It's like having the ability to clean and re-upholster your own furniture," he said.

The Futon Store also sells such space savers as papasan chairs, butterfly chairs, fabric laundry hampers, trash cans and CD racks.

"We sell a good mix of what we have," Kaszer said.

Bluemont Elementary School educators Katie Philp, fifth-grade teacher, and Peggy Enright, sixth-grade teacher, guide a group of fifth-graders and sixth-graders during the Manhattan tornado drill Tuesday afternoon. About 380 students, kindergarten through sixth grade, filed into the basement for the safety practice.

Statewide tornado drill prompts local elementary schools to participate in the awareness week

MICHELLE SMITH
Collegian

Kneeling school children lined the basement walls of Bluemont School as part of a tornado drill Tuesday afternoon.

Several local elementary schools conducted drills in conjunction with a statewide tornado drill.

"I don't know for sure how many schools there were. What we do is notify the superintendent's office of the statewide drill, and they disseminate the information," Pat Collins, Riley County Emergency Preparedness coordinator, said.

The local schools participate in the statewide drill because they are required to have at least one tornado drill a year, Collins said.

After hearing the signal, the school's 360 students go to the basement for the drill.

Kathy Lippert, a sixth-grade teacher at Bluemont School, said the children are trained in the classroom before the drill. Some teachers walk the students through the process to help avoid confusion.

"Sometimes, there is some confusion if the students are in a different class — like my kids are in music right now. Each class has their own suggested area where they are supposed to be," Lippert said.

Henrietta Boch, principal at Bluemont School, said the students are cooperative during the drills.

"Usually, the children don't get scared on a day like today. They know this is not a real tornado. They wait until everyone gets down to the basement before they get into the kneeling position because they want to make sure everyone can fit. They want everyone to be safe," Boch said.

Amy Thornburrow, first-grade student at Bluemont, explains why tornado drills are important.

"Because if you get real good at it, then you know what to do if it is real," Thornburrow said.

One of Thornburrow's classmates, Cassie McKeeman, describes the difference between a drill and the real thing.

"We should always listen. If the lights go off, then it is real."

The statewide tornado drill takes place every year as part of the Severe Weather Awareness Week.

The drill is designed to inform people of the coming severe weather season and to check the local siren systems and cable-television override symbols, Collins said.

Protest to target rape in Bosnia

LAURA HEIDE
Collegian

Muslims in the Manhattan community have scheduled a demonstration today from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the K-State Union Courtyard to protest the rape camps in Bosnia.

Rape is not considered a war crime, Huda Droll, Manhattan Muslim resident, said. Students are asked to sign a petition that asks the United Nations to declare rape a war crime. It also asks that those involved in committing this crime be punished.

"It is the Holocaust all over again," Droll said. "We are talking about human lives. They are wiping out an entire race the same way Hitler wanted to do to the Jews and even the Muslims then."

"Women between the ages of six and 60 are being gathered, put into rape camps built solely for this purpose and raped continuously," she said.

Serbian soldiers are given an order to impregnate Muslim women, she said.

"These women are being held against their will so that they won't purposely miscarry. They are being forced to breed children that are Serbs," she said.

Some of the Serbs are going far beyond this.

"Before a woman is actually dead, the men are betting on whether the child she is carrying is a boy or girl and ripping her stomach open to find out," Droll said. "These men are enjoying it. These men are crazy."

"One hundred thousand children are now orphaned. Their identities are being changed, and they are forced to become Serbs. It seems like they want to wipe out an entire religion from the face of this earth."

Tabassum Ameenuddin, Manhattan Muslim resident, said the war began on April 4, 1992, a Muslim holiday.

"The war began when the Serbian army blew up 500 worshippers of the Islamic religion in a masjid in Bosnia."

Droll said she wants to have this protest to inform the people.

"How can the people condone this?" Droll said. "I've never been able to understand this."

"Several families are having to witness their own children's death," she said. "They are

Regents bill approved by Senate

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The Senate took twice as long Tuesday debating a bill that would regulate radon gas inspectors as it did giving tentative approval to the first $1-billion budget of the Kansas Board of Regents and its universities.

It rejected the radon regulation bill, on a 12-15 standing vote, but advanced the regents appropriations bill on voice vote.

The bill will be up for a final Senate vote on Wednesday. Approval would send it to the House.

The bill appropriating $1.026 billion for the regents, six state universities, University of Kansas Medical Center and K-State Veterinary Medical Center was advanced with virtually no debate.

However, several senators said they considered it premature to spend that kind of money before the Legislature has a good reading on how much revenue the state is expected to take in next fiscal year.

Of the $1 billion-plus all-funds budget approved for the regents and their institutions, $432 million would come from the state general fund, with the rest coming from a variety of fees, tuition and federal funds.

Telefund successful, money to go for scholarships

RHONDA WILSON
Collegian

The first round of the KSU Foundation Telefund is finished.

This year, student callers raised more than $713,000, most of which will go toward student scholarships.

K-State's telefund is said to be the largest all-volunteer telephone campaign for higher education.

Students from the University's nine colleges, including the College of Technology in Salina, volunteered for four-hour blocks for the event.

Organizers measure its success in two ways — dollars raised and volunteer support, Russ McMahon, director of Telefund, said.

"The biggest success of Telefund is that we packed the phones all but one night," he said. "We could not be more pleased with the response of students."

The KSU Foundation expects to exceed 1,575 volunteers this year, he said.

Jan Herink, internal Telefund coordinator, has been involved with Telefund for almost six years.

Herink and her staff send out the pledge cards and handle the paperwork. Part of her job is to send out questionnaires to the volunteer callers.

Out of hundreds surveyed, only three or four students have a negative response to their Telefund experience, Herink said.

"Many of them say they didn't think they were going to like it, but they ended up having a good time," she said.

Student volunteers benefit not only by raising scholarship money for their college, but also from the experience of calling alumni.

Volunteer callers not only helped raise money for the University, but were able to practice their telephone skills, he said.

"This was baptism under fire to polish communication skills," he said. "Students come out of there with better skills than before."

This year Telefund was divided into two categories, McMahon said.

Phase one was intended to raise one-year pledges from alumni. February callers participated in this phase.

The second phase is intended to contact alumni for larger gifts. Calling for this phase of the fund-raising campaign will be March 14-17 and 28-31.

In connection with the Essential Edge Campaign, students will be calling select alumni to ask for a multi-year pledge.

"Students will call alumni who have expressed interest or we think would like to participate at a little higher level," McMahon said.

ON THE AGENDA

Navy offers engineers internships, money

KATHY WASKO
Collegian

With hard work and good grades, engineering students have the opportunity to earn lucrative scholarships and internships.

The U.S. Navy offers two scholarships. The first one is the Nuclear Propulsion Officer Candidate Program (NUPOC) and is only open to men.

"This program is not open to women, at least not until Congress changes its mind and allows women to serve on combat ships. All nuclear ships are classified as combat vessels," Hermann Donert, professor of nuclear engineering, said.

It is for nuclear engineering students who have above a 3.7 grade point average at the end of their sophomore year.

If the student gets accepted, the Navy pays for his junior and senior year. The student gets $1,400 a month until graduation. If he enlists during college, he gets a $4,000 bonus.

After graduation, the students go to officer candidate school for four months, and then they become an ensign. At that time, they get a $4,000 bonus and spend the next year in Navy schools.

"They then get assigned to a fleet and have the obligation to serve for four years with good pay," Donert said.

If the student's GPA is below a 3.5, he is still eligible to get support for one year.

The second program is open to women and is for students who are headed to become instructors in the Navy Nuclear Power School.

The applicants must have a 3.7 or better GPA and are eligible to apply after their sophomore year. They do not get the $1,400 a month or the $4,000 bonus when they enlist. After graduation, they must go to officer candidate school and serve four years. After they become officers, they become instructors for the Nuclear Power School in Orlando.

"With both programs, the students have to go to Washington, D.C., and interview with the admiral. The glory is the interview with the admiral," Donert said.

Any engineering junior is eligible to apply for a 10-week summer internship at the government agency in Washington, D.C.

"Nationally, there are 13 students who are doing the internship this summer, and K-State has two out of the 13. We've had at least one student go, as far as I can remember," he said. "Our students are good."

Brian Grell, junior in nuclear engineering, has been accepted for the internship. The application process started at the end of last semester.

The internship program is called W.I.S.E., which stands for Washington Internships for Students of Engineering.

"The whole point of internship is to write a policy paper. I chose the topic 'Peaceful Uses of Weapons Free Plutonium' and how it would be necessary," he said.

"We will be staying at George Washington University, and I think we'll get $270 a week to help pay for room and board," Grell said.

Student issues aired on talk radio

LAURA HEIDE
Collegian

Rush Limbaugh may have some competition if Purple Affair, a political talk show on KSDB-FM 91.9, continues to attract a following.

Stephen Seely, freshman in agriculture and student senator, is the host of the student-senate hour at 7:05 p.m. Mondays.

"It's a half-hour talk show that deals with issues involving students," Joe Montgomery, general manager of DB92, said.

"It is initiated by Seely and is oriented to student-senate topics, but not limited to those topics."

Listeners are encouraged to call in and give their opinions on campus-wide issues.

DB92 will evaluate the program at the end of the semester to see if it is worth extending to a one-hour show.

"We try to encourage people to call from the very beginning of the show because you never know when a topic is going to motivate someone to call," Montgomery, said.

"Unfortunately, people don't always call in unless it is an emotionally charged topic."

Issues discussed have included the efficiency of student senators and how people can contact senators and tell them what fees to increase.

The student-athletic fee and rumors that student senate wanted to pass a bill on athletic allowances also have been discussed.

"There was a rumor, according to one caller, that student senate was trying to pass a bill to give athletes allowances," Seely said.

"Senate never even discussed athletic allowances."

Some issues continue from one show to the next. One recurring topic is Lafene — the problem with HIV testing and the possibility of Lafene holding $2.3 million of students' money.

"The Lafene board isn't listening to students' concerns," Seely said. "We are encouraging Lafene to look into anonymous HIV testing."

"If you test negative, it still goes on your record, which insurance companies have the right to. The fact that you even had a test will cause your rates to go up. People aren't going to have a test done."

The Lafene Ad Hoc committee is looking into the possible $2.3-million holdings. The facts will be presented on the show.

Seely said listeners have been upset in the past and have stated that Purple Affair is nothing but bad publicity to organizations such as Lafene.

"My show does not present negative publicity. It presents the issues, and hopefully we can inform the students," he said.

Montgomery said Purple Affair plans to give 1993 student-body presidential candidates air time to discuss their platforms.

"The candidates will get equal amounts of air time," Seely said.

"I'm not favoring anybody. I think DB92 is a different type of audience that student senate usually doesn't reach."

Purple Affair has been on the air for five weeks.

"The show has gone through some changes from the very first, but it's definitely getting better," Seely said.

Space station can wait

THE ISSUE

Cost overruns are making the NASA space station idea seem less than practical.

WE SUGGEST

Prioritize. Space exploration can wait until more pressing problems are solved.

To reach the billions and billions of stars in the heavens, it takes billions and billions of dollars.

NASA has spent $8 billion on the Space Station Freedom project and projects the total bill at being more than $30 billion.

NASA also told Congress last week that cost overruns in one year could reach more than $500 million.

The Clinton administration ordered a redesign so the space station would not take money from other civilian space and aeronautics research programs.

In this, the beginning of the age of cutbacks, this is one that should be appreciated by most people.

Space research and exploration are important, but right now other problems should concern the human race rather than reaching Mars faster, or at all.

Can't we wait awhile to get to space and continue our nasty habit of trashing it?

The tired line "we must stay ahead of those damn Russians in the space race" doesn't apply anymore. They have other problems that keep them grounded.

With a 13-digit national debt, homeless Americans, an AIDS crisis and at least another dozen problems waiting for publicity, we have our hands full here on planet Earth.

Put the space station on the back burner — it's a luxury we can't afford right now.

TOLES

STEREOTYPING STEREOTYPES

There are some things we just have to do. Times when we must face the music, as they say.

Coming out is one of those albatross-like moments. While there is no one moment when you just "come out," there are certain quintessential moments in the journey.

For me, the coming out process has had a mind of its own. When I came out to myself, it seemed only natural that I would share the news. Friends. Parents.

Now, granted, I didn't think I would be sitting here writing another column about my sexuality for 20,000 people, but some things are never what we expect.

Ever since I was about 17 years old, I had wondered about my sexuality. Sure, I dated my fair share of men — hell, I even loved a few along the way. But one thing continued to haunt me. Why wasn't there any heart-thumping adrenalin racing through my veins? I continued on. Just haven't met the right man yet, I mused.

It wasn't until I went to my first gay bar that the infamous "it" actually hit me. Prior to the big night I was totally beleaguered by anxiety about the thought of going to a gay bar. It wasn't that I had a problem with gay people — I was going with my friends who were gay — it was just I had all these images of what the bar would be like.

Dim lights. Smoky rooms. And those backrooms everyone has heard about. All the seedy characters eyeing any warm body that slinked through the door. Better dress down. "Please don't let anyone hit on me," I begged to that often evasive higher power. And oh, the sex.

Images of two well-dressed (everyone knows gay men are impeccable dressers) men entangling themselves on bar stools. Lissy young lads determined to explore their libido. Stay close to your friends, my inner child yelled.

And the women. They were all going to be decked out in their best flannel shirt and some heavy duty work boots. "Short hair, big, fat asses. Not your type of girls" as Sandra Bernhard would say.

You see, the thing is, stereotypes and homophobia are not limited to the heterosexual world. While I knew plenty of gay people, I still thought they were the exceptions to all the stereotypes.

Needless to say, I was let down once we got to the bar. Not a bit of scandal or sleaze.

There were business men and women dressed in their power suits having a drink at a table in the corner. Young couples sitting at a booth with their arms around one another. People dancing, talking and laughing. There was an awful lot of laughing.

One image that seemed to be in perpetual rewind after that night was of two women. They were sitting at the table next to us. All I could hear was the reverberation of one of the woman's laugh. It was the best laugh I had ever heard. You know, the ones that are so contagious that sooner or later everyone is laughing at laughing more than anything else.

Well, for hours this went on. Her friend must have been quite funny. Or was it that they could laugh at this, their bar?

Often times gay bars are the only social outlet for the gay community. There are no other places to go and feel you can be yourself. I take that back — you can go anywhere and be yourself, but in a gay bar you don't have to worry about getting beat up if you hold hands or put your arm around somebody. You don't have to feel somebody's eyes stare right through you as they pass judgment on a person they don't even know. Or hear the whispers and comments that circle in the air around you.

It is a long journey to finding ourselves, but at least we can stop off at the bar for a drink or two. And don't forget to laugh.

RELIGION

Morality is an AIDS prevention measure

Editor,

In Kelly Klawonn's column in the March 3 Collegian, she accused the Roman Catholic Church of not having provided "preventative information" to the public in regards to the spread of AIDS and sexual intercourse.

Klawonn, you yourself included the quote "Morality is the only prevention for AIDS," as said by the leaders of the Catholic Church. In fact, they were partially right. Indeed, condoms, when used properly, can be beneficial in preventing the spread of the disease. Catholic officials, on the other hand, do not encourage premarital sex. They view sex as both an act of love between a husband and wife, and as an act of procreation.

By encouraging morality as a form of prevention of AIDS, they are reminding Catholics that they should abstain from premarital sex. Hey, they're right. If you don't have sex, you won't get AIDS that way. Klawonn, if you would have stopped and thought about this, you might have come to this revelation long ago.

And since I think you already realize this, you just used the quote as a chance to bash Catholicism. What about the number of other religions in the U.S. and around the world who encourage their younger followers to abstain from sex before marriage? In your eyes, are they at fault as well? I think the idea of viewing morality as a possible preventative measure against the AIDS virus should be applauded.

Klawonn, the next time you get an urge to write about anything any religion says or does, please try to inject a little objectivity into your assessment of their motive. You are obviously narrow minded, and you need to realize that. I think it is time you stop preaching and put your words into action. Instead of trying to open other people's eyes to your views, why don't you work on your own sense of open-mindedness?

RESPONSE

All philosophies have been twisted, Brad

Editor,

This is in response to Brad Seabourn's column titled "The Waco Interpretation."

Seabourn appears to have done his research this time (on the history of the Seventh Day Adventists), but he still blew it. He said that "Christianity's assertion that anyone can twist and pervert any 'good' and 'well-meaning' philosophy to suit the situation, is a lame excuse at the very least."

Wake up, Seabourn. People have been twisting well-meaning philosophy, uh, ever since there was well-meaning philosophy. There will always be someone out there who will attempt to use a law, a doctrine or a belief to suit their own behavior.

The followers of Vernon Howell were just that — followers of Vernon Howell, not of God. It is a basic principle of Christianity that one should follow the word of God, not the person preaching it.

As a Christian, I often refer to the New Testament for guidance on how to treat my fellow humans, or for encouragement when I'm feeling bad, or for help in making difficult decisions. Yes, there is room for interpretation — that's where valid ministers and preachers come in. They are the theological experts and they know how to interpret the Bible.

I attend church on Sundays so I can learn what I don't know about being a Christian. That's right — I don't know everything about Christianity — but at least I'm willing to admit it. Brad, you've fallen from your pedestal again.

Bonnie Nettles
Sophomore/Psychology

Seabourn can't seem to find other topics

Editor,

Brad Seabourn asserts that the David Koresh/Branch Davidian melee is "a good example of the kind of monumental misery Christianity has historically inflicted." By that standard, I imagine Stalin's purges are also a good example of the monumental misery atheism has inflicted.

Seabourn is the ultimate Johnny One-Note, with his monomaniacal anti-religion diatribes.

NEWS

Union brawl goes unreported as news

Editor,

How is it that a brawl on the K-State campus that resulted in the arrests of two K-State football players went unreported by the Collegian? Of course, the Manhattan Mercury did not run a story either — I had read about it in the Topeka Capital Journal.

The fact that the KSU police called the Riley County Police Department for assistance certainly demonstrates this was a major situation.

The Collegian staff was not totally ignorant of the fact, because the arrests of Keith Porter and Barrett Brooks both appeared under the police reports. I ask, why was this not reported?

Is it because the events occurred after an Omega Psi Phi, a black student fraternity's party, or is it because they are K-State football players?

I'm not asking for a front-page story, just some accurate informative journalism.

Celebration of India

Whenever I contemplate in leisure the times spent in India, glimpses of a life imbued with pleasure and sorrows, colors and shadows, dreams and mythologies and everything that resonates with a sense of festivity unfolds before my eyes with a great vividness. "The poetics of life!" I exclaim.

MAHESH
SENAGALA
GUEST

India presents to an onlooker a beauty of paradoxes and an unlikely coexistence of contradictions. Rabindranath Tagore comments that there is something in the Indian consciousness that reduces the immense burden of multitude to one point and miraculously ties together the diverse ends of life into just one impulse: celebration. Existence is permeated by celebration of life!

Time, for an Indian, is punctuated by a series of festivals of all kinds. The grammar of which is directly tied to seasonal and mythical landscapes. Every season brings with it different flavors of the ecstasy of celebration. Spring, summer, monsoons and winter follow each other in an animated continuum. A year is strewn with a multitude of dreams, colors, stories, legends, carnivals and so on.

The vagaries of life and the mundane complications of day-to-day existence are subdued under a beautiful veil of fiction and melody. Festivals, for an Indian, are a total renewal of life energies. As the prosperity of harvest flows from the fertile fields of rice and wheat to the houses decorated with mango leaves and flowers, skies dotted with kites, and the air filled with the melodies of cuckoo, spring arrives with the festival of Pongal.

Once spring blooms into a fullness of fecundity and fills the world with colorful flowers, brings the skies of fragmented blues and purples wearing a multicolored sun, and the greens, browns. ... Holi, the festival of colors, brings an ecstatic pulse to space and time. Undoubtedly the most spectacular festival, with people young and old, men and women, showering each other with a myriad of colors. Colors, the brilliance and the beauty. Singing songs of hope and happiness, life is started anew, time is regenerated, and a festive space is unveiled.

I could go on and on writing in delight about the festival of life and ruminate those moments of absolute forgetfulness — those moments that had the power of blending together even the most discordant enemies.

This spirit of celebration, and a unified view of life and nature, underlies all forms of creative expression: art, architecture, literature, music and cuisine. Watch a "saree" or a "dhoti" — simple rectangular pieces of cloth folded and tied into a beautiful form, and it sums up a world.

While I wrap up these textual renderings of the Indian landscape, plan this Saturday evening, March 13, for the "Indifest," at Manhattan Middle School.

Enjoy the display of artifacts and items of Indian life, slide shows, music and dances, Indian food (don't miss the Biryani!) and a whole spectrum of the celebration of life. You may obtain further info from 539-6974.

Mahesh Senagala is a graduate student in architecture.

Interpreters assist deaf students in class lectures

RITA KIDD
Collegian

As college students, today you walked to class and heard your instructor lecture. These are basic functions done without a lot of thinking or planning.

But some K-State students cannot accomplish these tasks without help.

This is when Services for Students with Physical Limitations can assist a student.

Since the 1973 Rehabilitation Act, universities are required to provide academic accommodations for students with disabilities, said Director Gretchen Holden.

Sixty to 80 students at K-State are physically disabled, Holden said.

"Deafness is the most serious disability because it limits communication," she said.

Any physical disability deprives a person of everyday resources, Holden said.

"People are not aware how serious it is to not have language, to not be able to hear gossip," she said.

Besides common daily occurrences, a deaf student also needs assistance to hear class lectures.

To interpret an instructor's lecture, a person proficient in sign language is employed. Holden brings the two people together.

Some signers at K-State have studied signing at Johnson County Community College. An intensive two-year program is taught there, Holden said.

"About half of our interpreters are native signers," Holden said.

Native signers have learned sign language as a second language when growing up with deaf family members.

"My mom is deaf and two-thirds of my dad's family are deaf," said Camilla Forshay, native signer and third-year senior in psychology and French.

One plus for Forshay is the exposure to classes in which she is not currently enrolled, but both sides benefit when hearing students assist deaf students.

The need is there for deaf students, and the signers receive compensation for their services, Forshay said.

"The money is putting me through school," she said.

New owner renovates Rocky Ford

WENDY BARRETT
Collegian

Rocky Ford Tavern has gone through several changes during the last two months.

Doug Long, owner of the Fishbowl, Bowinkle's Sports Bar and the Gin Mill Lounge, purchased Rocky Ford Tavern at the end of December.

He has started making changes to the interior of the tavern by replacing the floor and rebuilding the bar.

"I want to make this place into a down-home party bar that people of all ages can enjoy," Long said.

To accommodate patrons, beer prices at Rocky Ford Tavern have been lowered. Monday through Thursday, the tavern will feature 60-ounce pitchers of Old Milwaukee Light for $2.75 and Budweiser or Coors Light pitchers for $3.00.

The tavern also will have food specials, including a beer and pizza special the first week in March. Other goodies include polish sausage, pickled eggs and old-fashioned Gobbler's pickled turkey gizzards.

Since the establishment is a 3.2 alcohol tavern, they also will offer beer-to-go specials, Long said.

Long also has made plans to enlarge the outdoor beer garden to 1,000 square feet. He said he plans to have live entertainment in the beer garden once the weather warms up.

"The live entertainment is going to be anywhere from '50s and '60s music to new music and country," Long said.

Making the music and atmosphere appealing to customers of all ages is his main goal. He wants a diverse crowd to be able to enjoy the tavern, much like the crowd that frequents his other bars in Manhattan.

Long has many events planned once the cold weather clears out, including a spring fling in March.

"We are going to have a barbecue every Friday afternoon starting this spring. It will be a sort of TGIF party outside," he said.

There will be entertainment and food at the Friday afternoon parties, which will be in the beer garden and take place through the fall.

Groups also can contact Rocky Ford Tavern if they want to reserve the beer garden for a function, he said.

The garden will be available every day and night of the week, and there isn't a rental charge for use, he said.

After 19 years in the bar business, Long has owned 11 different bars. He said he feels his bars in Manhattan are all down-home kind of places everyone can enjoy.

"Bowinkle's and Fishbowl are the types of bars that suit all age groups," Jeff Stockham, senior in business, said.

"If he is planning to make Rocky Ford into the same kind of place, I think it will draw a lot of college students out there."

Beane named to all-Big Eight second team

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Bryant "Big Country" Reeves, Oklahoma State's 7-foot sophomore, who led the league in both scoring and rebounding, is the only unanimous first-team choice on the 1992-93 Associated Press All-Big Eight basketball team.

K-State's Anthony Beane, who transferred from Three Rivers Junior College in Poplar Bluff, Mo., and turned point guard into the Wildcats' strongest position, was named to the second team. He averaged 10.1 points and 4.6 assists per game.

Wildcats Deryl Cunningham and Vincent Jackson earned honorable mention honors.

Reeves, who blossomed into a dominating player so quickly it shocked even his coaches, averaged 19.7 points and 10.2 rebounds, the first man to top the Big Eight in both key statistics since Shaun Vandiver of Colorado in 1990.

Rex Walters, the stylish 6-4 senior who led No. 7 Kansas to a third straight Big Eight title while averaging 16.4 points, was named on every first-team ballot but one, and he is the only first-team repeater from 1991-92. Balloting was done by a panel of media representatives who regularly cover the Big Eight.

The third-leading vote-getter was Nebraska's Eric Piatkowski, a junior who averaged almost 17 points and played the key role in a stretch run that saw a young Husker team win eight of its last 11 games.

Iowa State guard Justus Thig-pen, a 6-2 senior who averaged 18 points and tied for the league lead with 36 steals, was named first team along with Colorado sophomore Donnie Boyce, 6-5, who switched to point guard late in the season and was the only Big Eight player among the top five in scoring, steals and assists.

Heading the second team is Steve Woodberry, who usually came off the bench and provided Kansas with steady production in every phase of the game.

Oklahoma's Terry Evans, who holds the Big Eight career record with 258 three-pointers and was named to the all-Academic squad a third straight year, was joined on the second team by Iowa State senior guard Ron Bayless, the Big Eight leader with 74 assists. Evans is also fourth all-time in the Big Eight with 632 assists and fifth with 258 steals.

Missouri's Melvin Booker also made the second team.

Voting on the AP team reflected the congested conference race, which ended Sunday with five schools within one game of each other. Thirteen players representing all teams received at least one first-team vote.

Walters and Thigpen are the only seniors on the first team. Evans and Bayless are the only second-team seniors.

Beane, who came to a K-State team that was badly in need of leadership, provided that almost instantly. He not only made a difference offensively — 4.6 assists per game, ranked fourth in the Big Eight — but he also provided defensive help.

During the Big Eight season, Beane's opponents shot just 35 percent from the field and averaged only eight points. From three-point range, opponents shot less than 20 percent in the 14 games.

The crewcut Reeves, who takes his nickname from his imposing countenance and his wide-spot-in-the-road hometown of Gans, Okla., elevated the Cowboys to No. 21 nationally. Picked sixth or seventh in the Big Eight in most preseason polls, the Cowboys tied for second.

Walters ended the regular season as the league's most accurate three-point shooter, and Reeves was No. 1 in field goal percentage, right ahead of Walters.

Since transferring from Northwestern and sitting out a year, Walters has teamed with senior point guard Adonis Jordan to lead Kansas to a two-year record of 51-10 and two conference championships. Jordan, bothered by a hairline fracture in one leg, dropped from first team in 1991-92 to honorable mention.

Boyce averaged 19.1 points, 3.8 assists and 2 steals for the last-place Buffaloes.

Pre-spawn time means good fishing

Describing the seasonal movement of the largemouth bass is difficult.

There are so many different areas to fish in Kansas that to predict fish behavior for the whole state would be almost impossible.

With a few guidelines on the behavior of the bass and how fish react to their surroundings, you may be able to have a successful trip this spring.

Here is a mini-biology lesson from a non-biologist's point of view (forgive me, Spencer). I know this is just scratching the surface, but it may give you some pointers.

Water temperature will have a great deal to do with the behavior of the largemouth in whatever body of water you are fishing.

During spring, the largemouth's life evolves around spawning. When the water reaches the mid 50s, the large-mouth will begin pre-spawn behavior and feed heavily.

If you are like me and don't have a huge bass boat complete with a Color-C-Lector and digital thermometer, a cheap thermometer tied to a string works just fine.

If you are fishing a farm pond or lake, the shallows will warm up quicker than the rest. These become the early season hotspots.

When the bass are in pre-spawn, fishing should be great. You can usually catch them on anything in your tackle box.

When the water temperature reaches the 60s, the females deposit eggs in the nests that the males have made. These nests are in one to three feet of water on a soft mud or gravel bottom.

If these substrates are not available, the largemouth will lay its eggs on anything the eggs will stick to. This includes any underwater structure such as vegetation, timber or debris.

During the spawn, the fish will not usually feed. But this doesn't mean they can't be caught. While the female is laying the eggs, she won't feed, but she will keep intruders out of the nest. After the eggs are laid, her job is done.

The male is in charge of guarding the nest, and he will be caught more easily than the female during the spawn. The female is resting and won't actively be hunting for food.

This means most of the bass caught during the spawn are male. The largemouth will take a lure during the spawn, but most likely the fish is merely reacting to a creature (the fisherman's lure) that seems to be threatening the eggs.

When the water temperatures reach the low 70s, it is known as the post-spawn period. Fish will resume day-to-day activities. The fish will resort to its normal summertime habits of staying in deeper water during the high-sun periods and venturing into the shallows at dusk and dark.

As the summer days grow longer, the bass will retreat to deeper water to escape the sunlight and surface temperatures. Food is relatively easy to find. So, feeding durations are usually short.

If there is sufficient shade, such as algae, trees or docks, the fish may stay in the shallows all day. If the water begins to reach 80 degrees, the largemouth will retreat to deeper waters. If they don't have deeper water to escape to, the bass will become sluggish and difficult to catch.

Cats blow 3-run lead in loss to WSU

STEVEN ROCK Collegian

K-State let a three-run, eighth-inning lead slip away Tuesday night against No. 6 Wichita State, eventually falling 7-5 at a chilly Frank Myers Field.

The punchless Cats, now 3-4, had just two hits in the game — only one of which left the infield — and all five K-State runs were unearned.

And Wildcat coach Mike Clark didn't take any satisfaction in knowing that his team led the Shockers 5-2 after seven full innings.

"It's a disappointment more than anything," he said. "We had a chance to win it, and we let it get away."

The Shockers, who improved to 7-2, took a 1-0 lead in the second inning on an RBI double by Jason Adams.

The Cats tied the score with a run and no hits in the fourth, when Brian Culp scored after a walk, passed ball, wild pitch and sacrifice fly.

"Big time inning, huh?" Shocker coach Gene Stephenson said.

Wichita State regained the lead in the top of the sixth inning, scoring an unearned run on a throwing error by Cat third baseman Matt Ketterman.

The Wildcats nearly broke the game open in their half of the sixth, scoring four times on just two hits.

Chris Wolf led off the inning with a walk. Shocker starting pitcher Shane Dennis, who had recorded eight strikeouts by that time, was relieved by all-American Darren Dreifort.

The first batter Dreifort faced, Brian Culp, grounded a tailor-made double-play ball to the shortstop. But Jason Adams never even touched the ball, and it rolled through his legs and into left.

"All we have to do is get our skirts down and make that play," Stephenson said. "Then they don't even score that inning."

But Dreifort then gave up a single to Brian Morrow, a transfer from Wichita State, who lined a 93-mph fastball up the middle. It was the Cats' first hit, and it tied the score at 2-2.

After a walk and a strikeout, Scott McFall grounded to short. But Adams again bobbled the ball, and McFall was able to beat out the possible doubleplay.

Chad Hess then rolled a slow roller toward third. Third baseman Casey Blake's throw sailed over the first baseman's head. Hess was given a hit, and McFall scored, giving the Cats a 5-2 lead.

"I thought we did take advantage of the opportunities we had," Clark said.

In the top of the eighth, Clark pulled Rob Merriman after he walked Richie Taylor and gave up a double to Toby Smith — the third of his three hits in the game.

But relief pitcher Brett Bock couldn't stop the bleeding. Three singles and three wild pitches later, and Wichita State had a four-run inning of its own. The Shockers took a 6-5 lead, and a ninth-inning insurance run off of Bock closed the door on the Cats.

"We were in a position to win it, and Brett just didn't come out of the bullpen with his good stuff," Clark said.

After a wobbly sixth, Dreifort did. He retired the last nine batters he faced and improved his record to 3-0. His fastball was clocked as high as 95 mph Tuesday night.

Bock fell to 0-1. His final pitching line? Three innings, four hits, three earned runs and four wild pitches.

The game was witnessed by 3,824 fans.

K-State and Wichita State go at it again tonight. The 7 p.m. contest will be played at Eck Stadium in Wichita.

Protecting eyes is seen as a tough chore

Screening helps keep damage to a minimum

NEIL ANDERSON
Collegian

Late-night reading by desk lamp and hours spent in front of a computer monitor or at smoke-filled bars are damaging to a student's eyes.

"Reading in dimly lit rooms is harmful to a person's eyes," Dori Bruccoli, manager of Duling Optical, said.

She said the eyes have to try to focus harder in lower light levels, causing strain on them.

"A person should get screened at least once a year," Bruccoli said. She said screening consists of reading the eye chart for a physician.

Screening is the best thing to do for your eyes to keep aware of problems that might develop, Bruccoli said.

One condition that can develop in a person's eyes is presbyopia. Presbyopia is when the lens in the eye loses some of its flexibility. It makes it harder to focus on close objects.

A person's eyes are changing gradually as one grows older, but they will not wear out from overuse.

Bruccoli said she recommended plain, non-prescription, tinted glasses for people who work in front of a computer for long periods of time.

"Nearly all of us will be subject to changes in vision as we approach our mid-40s," Dr. William Vietti, president of the Kansas Optometric Association, said.

Other conditions such as cataracts or retinal degeneration have higher risks, but current procedures and treatments can prevent these conditions from becoming too serious, Vietti said.

"But by maintaining healthy habits, being aware of the conditions and taking a few simple steps, these changes can be accepted without any significant change in lifestyle," Vietti said.

ADVICE FOR ANY VISION CHANGES

- Use higher wattage light bulbs from 100 to 150 watts.
- When working at a computer, sit back an arm's length from the screen. Take steps to eliminate glare on the screen, and make efforts to blink frequently.
- Glare off of a computer screen can come from the monitor and fluorescent lighting.
- When watching television, make sure the room isn't completely dark.
- Don't read in dimly lit rooms.

Smoking popular among students

Habit proves to have harmful, addictive effects

ROBBIE SPEARS
Collegian

Smoking is an addictive habit that kills 430,000 people a year, said Jayne Garcia, program director for the Kansas chapter of the American Lung Association.

Some K-State students pick this deadly habit up in college. Others have been puffing away since their early teen years.

Garcia said many students in college don't realize how harmful smoking is.

"With smoking, the results aren't there in a few months like alcohol and other drugs. It takes more time for the effects of smoking to show, and they will show up," she said.

Garcia said smoking among college females is high because they are faced with stressful situations and more peer pressure.

"There are also more female college students smoking than other females of the same age. This could be because of social aspects.

"Smoking is a long-term problem. Students who smoke don't feel that smoking will hurt them, and that they'll be able to quit anytime," she said.

Garcia said the biggest problem is that smoking is addictive.

"The longer they smoke, the harder it is to stop. It's more addictive than alcohol or cocaine," she said.

Barbara Lanning, senior in horticulture therapy, said she can't even remember when she started smoking.

"I don't even remember when I started. It was a long time ago. I just did it because it was the fashionable thing to do," she said.

Lanning said even though she has been reducing her tobacco intake, she still thinks she could quit anytime.

"I do enjoy it, and if I wanted to, I could quit today," Lanning said.

However, Zaid Al-Mawsawi, junior in architecture, said he tried to quit one time.

"I quit for a while last year. It was a $50 bet with a friend that I couldn't stop. I quit it for a month and a half and then started smoking again when finals came around," he said.

Cigarettes can be expensive, he said.

"The cost does play a factor. I spend more money on cigarettes when I'm getting stressed out. But when I'm low on cash, I roll my own because it's cheaper. Other times, I buy Camels because they have gifts you can receive from buying their brand," he said.

Al-Mawsawi said he isn't worried about the effects of smoking yet.

"I exercise. So, I guess I combat it. I coach a soccer team and ride my bike a lot," he said.

Al-Mawsawi said he started smoking in high school because his whole soccer team did it.

"Everyone did it. There was a little bit of peer pressure," he said.

Smoking appeals to Al-Mawsawi for a variety of reasons, and he said he will probably quit in the next couple of years.

"I like the way the smoke comes out of my mouth. Plus, it calms me down in stressful times," he said. "I think I'm young, and I can handle it. But I do plan on trying to quit when I graduate," he said.

Biofeedback combats stress

"Students today are feeling an environmental press that makes them more anxious about academic performance than they were 20 years ago."

SUSAN SCOTT
ASSOCIATE DEAN OF STUDENT LIFE

LORI SCHREIBER
Collegian

There is no such thing as a life without stress, Arthur Rathbun, counselor at University Counseling Services, said.

For college students, stress can come from many sources.

Rathbun said the No. 1 source of stress for college students is final exams. After that come exams in general, relationships with parents, relationships with boyfriends and girlfriends and lastly, financial concerns.

Susan Scott, associate dean of student life, said she sees students getting concerned about the job market and academic performance.

"Students today are feeling an environmental press that makes them more anxious about academic performance than they were 20 years ago," Scott said.

How students perceive a situation, Rathbun said, determines their level of stress in the situation. Scott said the different coping methods students have learned from their family and other role models is also an important determining factor of how students will deal with stress.

Scott said she is particularly concerned about the idea that most students seem to think the busier they are, the more important and successful they are. She said this thinking leads to overload and excess stress.

In this situation, Scott advises students to re-evaluate everything they are doing and to figure out what is important to them.

Dealing with stress can be done in many ways.

One method is biofeedback training. Rathbun coordinates the biofeedback stress management lab at the counseling center.

He said decreasing skin temperature and increasing muscle tension are indicators of stress that can be detected by biofeedback machines.

When hooked up to the machines, just the mention of something stressful can alter body temperature and muscle tension, and the biofeedback meters reflect this change immediately.

When the students learn relaxation techniques they can control these physiological responses.

As they practice these techniques while hooked up to the biofeedback machine they can see the meters go down.

"It is this direct feedback that lets students know the strategies are working," Rathbun said.

He said the training usually is done in a five-week group session.

Training includes autogenic training, visualization, breathing and systematic muscle relaxation. All are forms of relaxation and self-regulation. Autogenic training is self-programming images that evoke a calm, relaxing physiological feeling.

Once the students learn the skills, Rathbun said it is important they use them.

"If you don't use the skills, you learn then nothing will happen," he said.

Rathbun said learning to control their emotional and physiological responses will help students throughout their lives.

"It is more difficult to negotiate if you are not emotionally and physiologically calm. You do things in these situations you wish you hadn't done," Rathbun said.

"When you can moderate your level of emotional and physiological arousal then you can deal more effectively with the situation at hand."

He said biofeedback training is not for everyone. If students are dealing with an immediate crisis, they need to take care of that before taking the biofeedback class.

"It is hard to learn something when you are in a crisis," Rathbun said.

Hunting among the red rocks

Area hunters participate in some friendly competition in a controlled pheasant hunt Saturday at the Red Rock Game Farm

Six miles north of Wamego, I saw the first sign. Never having been in a "controlled shooting area" before, my first instinct was to duck.

The Red Rock Game Farm, a half-section in the heart of the Flint Hills, surrounded us. We pulled into the muddy drive and parked our Ford Escort at the end of a crooked line of mud-caked trucks in owner Lynn Pugh's driveway.

This weekend, March 5-6, was the and were taken through two fields of prairie grass, passing another "shooting area" sign, to meet up with one of the 11 teams of two hunters.

Yellow "caution" tape teamed up with barbed-wire fences to mark the field boundaries.

"There they are," Ira Haynes, Manhattan resident and driver of the truck, said to us. He pointed to two little brown dots and a little blue dot, moving slowly through a third field a few hundred yards away across a creek and over a barbed-wire fence.

A short hike later, we met father-and-son team Howard and Greg Wilson. The little blue dot was Ron Lackey, one of the judges.

I asked how long the Wilsons had been hunting together.

"Oh, since he's been about 7," Howard said of his son, now a senior at K-State. "We were hunting when he couldn't even hold a gun."

Two German shorthairs raced, noses down, through the shoulder-high grass. The men held their guns pointing at parallel angles into the sky.

Each team had an hour to work a 10-acre field. The Wilsons were almost done. Only one of the six pheasants, planted earlier in the grass, still awaited its fate.

Suddenly, the dogs stopped. We stopped. The father and son crept up behind the dogs, pointing. The sky was bright blue all around. A soft, warm breeze tipped the tallgrass.

Silence.

In an instant, the bird was up.

In another, it was down. The male shorthair, Snicker, trotted off to retrieve it.

"That's six birds in 25 minutes," the judge said marking on a notepad. "Not bad."

Hunters were scored on how many of the birds they shot and killed and on performance of their dogs. There were 36 points possible. That bird gave the Wilsons 30.

The domestic birds behave like wild birds but tend to sit longer and fly a little slower, Pugh said.

The hunters competed for a Ruger 22-caliber automatic rifle and three cases of shotgun shells. But it was clear they were there for the love of hunting and the beauty of their surroundings, not the prizes.

"Some of the best days are the ones you don't fire a shot," Kent Yeager, Manhattan resident and another judge, said. "This area is really popular. It's just beautiful."

"I moved to Florida for a while, but I came back to visit one year and decided I didn't want to leave."

Controlled shooting areas are gaining popularity. Pugh said he estimated Kansas alone had a dozen.

Pugh, who also runs Pugh Communications and raises cattle, said he began toying around with the idea of a controlled hunting area three years ago. A year later, Red Rock had its first season, which runs September through March.

He uses three fields for the controlled hunts now but is in the process of planting all of his 320 acres to native grass for hunting. He also plants milo, millet and soybeans to attract and keep wild birds.

Pugh hunts the wild birds himself and also takes individuals and groups out to hunt for a fee.

To get a license for the controlled hunting area, Pugh must apply each year to the Kansas Department of Wildlife and Parks. Individual hunters must also have licenses, which can be bought at Red Rock the day of the hunt for $10.50.

This competition cost $105 per team, which paid for the birds, judges, promotion and prizes.

Pugh said since he had yet to really make any on the venture, money wasn't what motivated him to create the game farm.

"I've been hunting since I was 14 or so," he said. "I think I bought my first shotgun when I was 13 or 14, and I still have it now, at 49."

Controlled hunting is especially popular with avid, seasoned hunters, Yeager said.

"Before the season, people come up here to work their dogs, get some practice in," he said. "And after, they like to be able to continue hunting out of season. I think that's one of the reasons people get into this."

Pugh named the farm for the hundreds of red granite rocks, brought to Kansas by glaciers during the Ice Age, scattered throughout the tallgrass fields.

Aside from the competitions and the wild bird hunting, Pugh also has sporting clays and controlled hunting for groups or individuals. The cost of the hunts depends on the game, ranging from $5.50 each for quail to $70 for a wild turkey.

Pugh said he encourages hunters to bring their own dogs but will also rent his own dogs out for use.

The shed out of which Pugh operates his communications business and the game farm is also equipped with a room to clean and dress birds, which the hunters generally keep. Pugh will also clean the game for them at 75 cents a bird.

March 28, Red Rock will sponsor a benefit shoot for K-State student Chris LaMaster who needs a bone-marrow transplant. For more information, call Pugh at 456-7664.

Volunteer Steve Kraxberger, Manhattan, swings a pheasant before planting it in prairie tallgrass. To ensure the birds would stay until flushed by the dogs, Kraxberger would tuck their heads under their wings and swing them around twice to disorient them.

Red Rock Game Farm keeps pens of quail, pheasant, chukar and wild turkey. The birds are hatched on another farm before being purchased by owner Lynn Pugh.

second competition shoot at Red Rock this season.

One would never know there was a contest going on, though. Men in flannel, caps and hunting vests joked about the mud covering them and their dogs and their trucks. The teams who had already hunted leaned against the muddy trucks, petting their dogs and nursing beers.

It was 9 a.m.

"There's refreshments inside," said Steve Kraxberger, Manhattan resident and our greeter. "Help yourself."

After more introductions, we climbed into one of the muddy trucks

Manhattan residents Greg Wilson, right, and his father, Howard, clean and dress their pheasants after the competition. The father and son team finished second and shot five out of six pheasants that were set for them.

Naps not always a good idea

RANCE AMES
Collegian

After a late night studying, many students choose to nap in the afternoon. This may not always be a good idea.

"Naps often frustrate your own natural ability to stay in a good sleeping pattern," Art Rathbun, counselor for University Counseling Services, said. "A nap often makes it more difficult to get to sleep at your normal time."

If you nap at the same time every day, it is possible for naps to become part of a regular sleep cycle, Rathbun said.

"The problem is that student schedules are usually all over the place, and it is difficult to get into a regular nap pattern," he said.

Jason Chansler, freshman in civil engineering, usually takes a nap twice a week when he has a two-hour break between classes.

"I take around an hour-and-a-half nap right after lunch," Chansler said. "It kind of makes me drowsy later, and it takes a while to get going again."

Chansler said he takes the nap because he often doesn't get enough sleep the night before.

Rathbun said it is very important to have a consistent sleep schedule.

"A sleep deficit can have harmful effects over time," Rathbun said. "If you consistently go without enough sleep, your performance in academic and other activities will suffer."

If a student stays up all night studying for an exam, it is better to wait until the next night to sleep rather than taking a nap during the day, Rathbun said.

"It is better to return to your normal pattern of nighttime sleep than taking a three-hour nap," he said.

People differ on the amounts of sleep they require.

"A small percentage of people are fine getting only five hours of sleep a night, but most college students require seven or eight hours on the average," Rathbun said.

It is important to be honest with yourself about how much sleep you need and then operate as much as you can within your body rhythm.

"It is more effective for some people to stay up late and get up late, while others are better off if they go to bed early and get up early," Rathbun said.

"The key is to find out your sleep needs and adapt to those needs as much as possible."

forced to eat and lick the blood of their child. One whole town had to sign over their houses at gun-point, and the whole community had to walk to another place."

The Muslims are being forced to drink alcohol, which is against their religion. Crosses are being cut into their bodies. Six hundred masjids and many hundreds of communities have been destroyed. These reasons, along with the thousands of rapes, are why Droll said she thinks the protest is important.

Droll said many people will forget about the rapes and injustices after the war.

"When the war is over, everything will seem legitimate," she said.

Tell him he should spring into some personal spring cleaning

DEAR CASSANDRA,

First of all, this isn't the typically bogus letter that frequents this column. Put simply, we have a crisis. A neighbor who lives by himself has a serious hygiene problem. Specifically, he refuses to wash his clothes or bathe for long stretches of time. This blatant disregard for cleanliness is interrupted only by trips home or visits by family.

Over the months, the "funk," as it is commonly referred to, has reached such a level that even innocent passers-by notice it seeping into the hall. Even he has had problems enduring it, but he still refuses to change his unsanitary ways. As warmer weather approaches, we fear he may open up his door, releasing a far more potent stench which we will have to endure.

For quite some time, our concerned group has been persistently pointing this out. Our approaches in informing the individual in question have ranged from levity to blunt honesty, but to no avail. We hope your response will help all parties involved.

Yours in hope,

Funk Control

DEAR FUNK CONTROL,

Smelly people are also a pet peeve of mine.

Show him this column.

Son, you stink, plain and simple. Your neighbors think you're a freak.

Wash your clothes, wash your linens, take a shower and brush your teeth.

No one wins when people play games with personal hygiene.

You might think it's cute or funny to smell bad, but you're driving your neighbors crazy.

Take a ride on the pride bus and do a little personal spring cleaning. Remember to wash behind your ears.

If you just can't seem to get the job done, seek professional counseling (or at least find an amateur counselor who has a lot of experience).

SEXUALLY TRANSMITTED DISEASES

SPONSORED BY KSU
COMMUNICABLE
COMMITTEE

HEPATITIS

CAUSE: Hepatitis B, C, & D.

Viruses transmitted by sex, blood & birth.

PREVALENCE: "B"-300,000 (5% develop chronic liver disease); "C"-150,000 (50% develop chronic liver disease); "D" occurs only in conjunction with hepatitis "B".

SYMPTOMS: None or fever of nausea, malaise, muscle & joint aches, jaundice and appetite loss.

TEST: Blood test

CURABLE: Not always. Cured by immune system, not medicine. Vaccine available.

COMPLICATIONS: Death, chronic active hepatitis, cirrhosis, liver failure, cancer of liver; if no symptoms, can unknowingly infect others, babies can be infected.

HVP

CAUSE: Human Papilloma Viruses.

PREVALENCE: At least 1/2 million new cases a year. Very common at K.S.U.

SYMPTOMS: None; occasional irritation of genital area. Warty growths in estimated only 30% of those infected; warts on genitals, anus, and throat possible.

TEST: No blood test or culture. Visual examination, Vinegar test, PAP Smear.

CURABLE: No, probably lifelong infection.

Treat lesions but cannot cure the infection.

COMPLICATIONS: Can cause pre-cancer (dysplasia) and cancer of the cervix, and perhaps of penis and vagina. If no lesions to warn can infect others unknowingly. Rarely, babies are infected.

NGU/MPC

CAUSE: Numerous: Chlamydia causes 50-60%; 20-25% by ureaplasma and mycoplasma; remainder unknown.

PREVALENCE: Very common at K.S.U. 2-4 million in the U.S.A.

SYMPTOMS: None, or penile discharge, painful urination, vaginal discharge, pelvic pain.

TEST: Always screen for Chlamydia and Gonorrhea; gram stain.

CURABLE: Yes.

COMPLICATIONS: Prostate infection, Epididymis infection, Testicular infection, sterility by scarring sperm or fallopian ducts, pelvic infection.

NGU (men): Non Gonococcal Urethritis
MPC (women): Muco Purulent Cerricitis

RISKS

Unavoidable: birth to infected parent.
Avoidable (Behavior choices):

1. MULTIPLE PARTNERS

2. SEX:

- A. Causal or anonymous
- B. Oral, genital and especially anal sex.
- C. Going bare—Condoms aren't 100% but much better than bare.

3. IV DRUG USE and needle sharing.

4. ALCOHOL—drops inhibitions and drops pants.

HIV-AIDS

CAUSE: Human Immunodeficiency Virus, type 1 (1 of every 250 infected), type 2 (rare in the U.S. so far).

PREVALENCE: 1-1 1/2 million U.S.A.: 10-15 million worldwide. Estimates 40-50 K-Staters predicted to be HIV-infected.

SYMPTOMS: None; occasional flu-like illness 2-3 weeks after infection. Then nothing for 8-10 years when infections and cancers of AIDS appear.

TEST: Blood test. County health dept. $15 (confidential or anonymous), Lafene $28 (Confidential), Community Clinics $40-$45 (Confidential).

Negative results do not guarantee safety.

CURABLE: No.

COMPLICATIONS: Death, numerous infections and cancers. In addition to sex, can be transmitted by blood or birth.

GONORRHEA

CAUSE: Neisseria gonorrhea, a bacteria.

PREVALENCE: 1-2 million a year, much less common than Chlamydia

SYMPTOMS: Same as Chlamydia.

TEST: Swab test from penis, cervix, throat, rectum, etc.

CURABLE: Yes, if found.

COMPLICATIONS: Same as Chlamydia. Some bacterial strains have developed resistance to some antibiotics.

RISK REDUCERS

1. ABSTINENCE. Just say no!
2. AVOID MULTIPLE PARTNERS.
3. AVOID CASUAL AND ANONYMOUS SEX including prostitutes.
4. KNOW YOUR PARTNER'S SEXUAL PAST. "Date and relate before you mate."
5. DON'T DO DRUGS: IV, alcohol or otherwise. They can lower your defenses to sexual and blood exposures.
6. CONDOMS (Coated with Nonoxynol-9). Not 100% safe.
7. THINK AND CHOOSE CAREFULLY with your head, not your hormones.
8. PARTNERS of infected persons must be informed and treated.

HERPES

CAUSE: Herpes Simplex Virus, (Types 1 & 2)

PREVALENCE: 20% Adults infected, 1/2 million new cases a year, 60% never have symptoms SYMPTOMS: None, or painful blisters and ulcerations of genital skin.

TEST: Swab culture of infected skin; blood test less helpful

CURABLE: No, but medication available to help. Lifelong infection.

COMPLICATIONS: Recurrence with or without symptoms, so can infect others unknowingly. Babies can be infected. Can infect eyes, mouth, cause encephalitis/ meningitis.

SYPHILIS

CAUSE: Treponema pallidum, a bacteria

PREVALENCE: Increasing since 1986: about 130,000 cases a year.

SYMPTOMS: none early on; 1st stage chancre (sore) that resolves on own; 2nd stage: fever, malaise, lymph node swelling, hepatitis, bone infection, rash (esp. palms & soles) and genital wart-like growths. Late stage: Damage to brain, joints, heart, blood vessels, eyes, virtually any organ.

TEST: Blood test; scraping and darkfield microscopy of chancre.

CURABLE: Yes, if found.

COMPLICATIONS: Paralysis, dementia, brain infection, death. Dubbed "The great Imitator" because it can present itself in so many ways.

CHLAMYDIA

CAUSE: Chlamydia trachomatis, a bacteria.

PREVALENCE: #1 STD, over 4 million a year in U.S.A.,

SYMPTOMS: None (Men & Women), or a penile discharge, testicular pain, painful urination, pelvic pain & vaginal bleeding.

TEST: Swab test from penis, cervix, throat, rectum, etc.

CURABLE: Yes, if found.

COMPLICATIONS: Sterility, ectopic pregnancy, testicular & prostate infections, PID (pelvic inflammatory disease) Spontaneous Abortion. Unknowingly give to sexual partner. Babies can be infected.

Wild Turkee candidates announce

Eric Henry, graduate student in journalism, left, and Ed Skoog, senior in English, right, play Bluegrass while announcing their bid for vice-president and president underneath the clock by Denison Hall Wednesday afternoon. Some of the issues they plan to deal with include free tickets for students to athletic events and parking.

Blue fingers, pickin' bluegrass on a banjo and a guitar.

A small crowd gathered around Ed Skoog and Eric Henry Wednesday, as they played bluegrass and announced their candidacy for student body president and vice president, respectively.

Skoog, senior in English and arts and sciences senator, and Henry, graduate student in journalism and mass communications and graduate student senator, announced by the clock plaza near Denison and Seaton halls.

The candidates sat on the bench, holding their instruments as they described their platforms. Both are running on the Wild Turkee Workers' Party ticket, which Skoog founded one year ago.

"The election's in five weeks, and we're pretty excited about it," Skoog said. "It's been a long time since a couple of people who are perfectly insane have ran for it and had a chance of winning it."

The candidates want to keep some promises that have been made to students for many years.

"We want to do the things that should have been done all along. Candidates always say the same things. We need to be incorporated. We need to keep the students in mind. We need a parking garage," Skoog said.

"If we get elected, we'll definitely do that stuff."

Skoog and Henry listed several issues they would address if they win the election, many of which involved the K-State Union.

"The Union needs to allow smoking in it again. We also need to bring it into the capitalistic age and have outside vendors," Skoog said.

A member of the crowd asked for an example of the kind of vendors.

"McDonald's or Arby's," Henry said. "At least there should be stands. It would make the Union more accountable."

Skoog said he would like the Wildcat mobile that used to hang over the Union Courtyard returned.

"We need to put the mobile back up or have something equally ugly and artistic," he said.

The Union should also have discounts for students, Skoog said, as opposed to faculty/staff discounts.

"We built the thing, we should get the discount. And the Bluemont room should be closed down. No student has eaten there in 12 years."

Solving the transportation-parking garage problems are easy, Henry said.

"We want to have a bus by the first snow of next year," Henry said. "There are all kinds of ideas on busing and transportation floating around SGA. It's time to pick one of them. It's not rocket science. It's just a bus. If plans were buses, we'd all be riding."

Skoog continued on that idea.

"We need a parking garage. We just need to make sure it doesn't turn into a parking garage for faculty/staff," he said.

Students shouldn't have to buy a park-

Reno gets unanimous approval of committee

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Janet Reno won unanimous approval Wednesday from the Senate Judiciary Committee, to become the nation's first female attorney general, after hearings that one lawmaker called a veritable lovefest.

The panel's action sent her nomination toward a vote in the full Senate, where she is expected to win easy confirmation and complete President Clinton's Cabinet. Committee Chairman Joseph Biden said he hoped the vote could take place by week's end.

"I think from the time Ms. Reno is sworn in that the American people will know that they do have a friend, that they do have an advocate, that they really do have a people's counsel," Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said just before the Judiciary vote.

Said Sen. Dianne Feinstein, D-Calif., "I think, in fact, it is history in the making, and I am very proud to be here to be part of it."

The vote was 18-0.

Reno, 54, chief prosecutor in Miami for the past 15 years, had cautiously weaved her way through two days of questioning that revealed more about the breadth of the Justice Department's mandate, than about her.

She fielded questions on subjects ranging from international terrorism to the tax system on Indian tribal lands, promising to work with committee members about their concerns, but saying she needed to learn more.

After a particularly long and detailed answer from Reno on how she wanted to focus more attention on the juvenile justice system, Sen. Herb Kohl, D-Wis., asked a follow-up question.

"Did you say you would support increased funding for juvenile justice?" he asked.

"Didn't say," she answered. Chuckles floated around the big hearing room.

"I can see you're getting the hang of this. Might as well keep the momentum going," Biden said later, after Reno declined the offer of a break from her second day of testimony.

"This hearing demonstrates in my mind that the best qualified man for the job is very often a woman," Sen. Carol Moseley-Braun said. "And I must say ... this has been a veritable lovefest for you."

"I can't quite describe a confirmation hearing as a good time," Reno said.

Careful not to offend the senators, Reno also was wary of straying from President Clinton's public positions, including the lawsuit over closed meetings involving Hillary Rodham Clinton's health-care commission.

Asked by Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., about federal laws that require open meetings for any commission that includes non-federal employees, Reno said she understood that for the purposes of the law, the first lady is recognized as a federal officer.

That was before a federal judge ruled Wednesday that Hillary Clinton was not.

Reno's description of her approach to legal management was decidedly centrist, and she promised consultation not only with senators, but with local law enforcement officials.

During the two days of hearings, no one questioned the qualifications of the Harvard Law School graduate to take the job.

DISCUSSIONS about gays in the Military

NICOLLE FOLSOM
Collegian

President Clinton's proposal to permanently lift the gay ban from military forces was the focus of a debate sponsored by the Bisexual and Gay and Lesbian Society at 7 p.m. Wednesday.

Over 70 people attended the debate in the K-State Union Little Theater, where three panelists fielded questions.

Al Zimmerman, Ecumenical Campus Minister; BaGaLS adviser Kent Donovan, associate professor of history; and Richard Pretorius, editorial page editor of the Manhattan Mercury, shared their opinions on the gay ban and other homosexual issues.

"I do not believe the bible says homosexuality is a sin," Zimmerman said.

He emphasized the bible means different things to different people.

Zimmerman said opposition to gays in the military is a form of bigotry and prejudice.

It is a Catch-22, he said, when people are gay and want to be part of the armed services — either lie and face fraudulent enlistment charges or tell the truth and get turned down.

Donovan, who served in the military for several years, said he lied about his own sexual orientation in order to join the military. "I lied when I went into the armed forces," he said. "If lying disqualifies people for the armed forces, we would have no armed forces."

Little or nothing will happen when the ban is permanently lifted because it is not automatically going to make homosexuals come out, Donovan said.

He said a majority of gays in the military are paranoid and afraid.

This same problem exists at K-State, Donovan said.

"It's very difficult to get lesbians and gay men to come out on this campus," he said.

Many gay students were afraid to attend the debate in fear of being recognized, Donovan said. Gay faculty are also afraid to come out of the closet

Christopher Eschbach, freshman in history, and his wife, both currently serving in the military at Fort Riley, raises a question to the panel about the aspects on what grounds a homosexual soldier would be released.

BELOW: Kent Donovan, associate professor of history, responds to a question brought up during a panel discussion concerning gays in the military in the K-State Union Little Theater Tuesday night.

because they fear losing their jobs.

Donovan said he isn't afraid of losing his job.

"President Wefald knows I'm a homosexual, and he thinks it's marvelous," he said.

Audience members were primarily against the gay ban.

► SECOND SUSPECT ARRESTED IN BOMBING

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — A Palestinian-American chemical engineer was ordered held without bail Wednesday on a charge of helping to bomb the World Trade Center. He became the second suspect directly linked to the fatal blast.

Nidal A. Ayyad, 25, was arrested at his suburban Maplewood home by an FBI SWAT team. He was brought before a magistrate on a complaint charging him with "aiding and abetting the malicious damage and destruction" of the trade center.

Ayyad, a Kuwaiti-born naturalized American citizen, was linked to Mohammed Salameh, charged last week with renting the van used to carry the bomb that devastated the skyscraper complex Feb. 26, killing five people.

James Esposito, the FBI's special agent in charge for New Jersey, said Ayyad's chemical background was significant, but he would not say whether Ayyad was believed to have made the bomb.

PEOPLE

A dollar date helps end local hunger

LOVE TICKETS

■ The Love Connection will be selling the dollar tickets from 10:30 a.m. to 3 p.m. today and Friday in the Union.

RITA KIDD

Collegian

For only a dollar, students may be introduced to a great night of fun.

It could be as simple as 1-2-3. Buy a ticket at the Love Connection table in the K-State Union, wait to be matched with a date and attend a party Sunday night.

Students Ending Hunger is sponsoring the event for students to have a different experience and aid the local fight against hunger.

"We started the project this semester to make Manhattan a hunger-free zone," said Mesfin Kahsay, sophomore in chemical engineering and event coordinator.

After recently establishing new goals, the group is focused on the local area with more hands-on experiences, said Amy Sislo, freshman in anthropology and president of Students Ending Hunger.

"We're still in step one of the project," Sislo said.

Increased transportation is one goal the local group is planning on improving, Sislo said. A person who is fighting hunger does not always have transportation to go obtain the needed food.

Besides short-term local goals, strategic planning and action is a long-term goal of Students Ending Hunger, Sislo said.

Everyone that fills out a questionnaire will have a 'date' for the party at 8 p.m. Sunday at the Ecumenical Christian Ministry building.

If the males and females filling out questionnaires do not balance in number, members of the organization or their friends will provide everyone with an escort for the evening, Sislo said.

"It's just a way to bring all these singles together," Sislo said.

Entertainment will be provided and will include some icebreakers.

Gift certificates from Carlos O'Kelly's, Valentinos, Cactus Jack's and Pizza Hut will be awarded as prizes.

"It's more for fun and to raise a little money and awareness," Sislo said.

Artillery unleashed on refugee city

Government soldiers evacuated from Srebrenica, people in town close to death

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TUZLA, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Serb forces unleashed their artillery on several areas Wednesday and poised to overrun Srebrenica, a refugee-filled city where doctors reportedly are performing amputations without anesthetics.

A Bosnian government helicopter emblazoned with a red cross landed in Tuzla in the first evacuation of government soldiers from Srebrenica. Its bloody and battered passengers spoke volumes about the suffering in Srebrenica, 40 miles to the southeast.

Aboard the helicopter were eight wounded soldiers. The right hand of one was blown off; several were missing legs, and the head of one man was swathed in dirty, blood-caked bandages.

Ibrahim Becirevic, a Bosnian army spokesman in Srebrenica reached by ham radio, said hundreds of Muslim refugees were still arriving daily in the city.

Dr. Simon Mardell, an official with the World Health Organization, said nearly 100 people in the town were close to death and needed urgent evacuation.

Serbs for the second day blocked a U.N. convoy heading to evacuate scores of sick and wounded from a nearby Muslim enclave, Konjevic Polje. Muslim officials said Serb artillery pounded Konjevic Polje, killing scores of people.

Frustrated by the failure of U.N. evacuation attempts, Bosnian government chief-of-staff Sefer Halilovic on Monday ordered a counter-offensive in eastern Bosnia.

EMPLOYMENT

Mock interviews help in job search

RITA KIDD

Collegian

The resume markets the job applicant on paper. The interview markets the job applicant in person.

Although second to occur, the interview is the single most important aspect in job hunting, according to "Interview," a pamphlet published by the Career Planning and Placement Center.

The second annual College of Architecture and Design Mock Interview Day will be Thursday at the placement center.

"The goal of a mock interview is to provide students with an opportunity to practice the interview process," Marcia Schuley, assistant director at the center, said.

At some point during the year every college at K-State has a mock interview day. This year, the architecture and design mock interview day is planned with 10-minute critique sessions to benefit the student.

Another feature this year is a general informative session, which any student may attend in an effort to make oneself familiar with the necessary aspects of an interview. The session will be 3:30 p.m. Thursday in the Big 8 Room in the K-State Union.

Architecture and design student organizations have shared in the planning of the mock interview day.

"It's been a positive experience for the students," Schuley said.

Seventeen firms or agencies will be represented. Some firms, especially one from Denver, would not be represented if the interview day did not occur, Schuley said.

Sign-up for mock interviews began on March 3 and will continue through Wednesday in outside Seaton 212.

Occasionally, a student will receive a job offer after a mock interview session, Schuley said.

At interview time it is important for an applicant to consider every aspect of their first impression. Interview apparel should emulate other professionals in your field, according to the interview pamphlet.

LECTURE

Series offers dynamic speakers in business

RITA KIDD

Collegian

Herman Cain, president and chief executive officer of Godfather's Pizza Inc., outlined a paradigm for success in business Wednesday in Forum Hall in the K-State Union.

"The way to get promoted in corporate America is to do an outstanding job at the job you are doing," Cain said.

The lecture was a segment of the Distinguished Lecturer Series sponsored by the College of Business Administration and attended by a near-capacity crowd of business students.

Cain said that to become successful during his lifetime, he tried to stay focused on the quality of the job he was doing at the time.

"When you make the decision to go to the next phase, focus on giving it your all," he said.

The destinations of the future are never known, Cain said. An example he used was to imagine you were at a bus stop, and the bus of opportunity came.

"If I didn't get on the bus, I never knew when the next bus was going to come along," Cain said.

A well-known person in the business world or a top official in a corporation or the government is usually selected for the series, said Stan Elsea, associate professor of management and lecture series coordinator.

"Cain was here three years ago. He is such a dynamic speaker I wanted to get him back here again," Elsea said.

Daniel McKelway, clarinet soloist
Wednesday, March 17, 8 p.m.

No, there won't be any kangaroos, and Crocodile Dundee won't make a guest appearance. But when the Australian Chamber Orchestra comes to McCain, you'll get a chance to experience what The Bulletin with Newsweek (Australia) calls "a stratospheric standard" in classical music.

The group, led by hyper-talented young Aussie director, Richard Tognetti at lead violin, will perform works by Mozart, Haydn, Bartók and Weber.

Joining the ACO is clarinet soloist, Daniel McKelway. The Seattle Post-Intelligencer characterized his style as "like a trapeze artist, stunning us with his risky tricks and persuading us by his poetry."

Don't miss this performance by the finest young musicians Australia has to offer.

KNOW ABOUT ISLAM

The most fundamental teaching of ISLAM is the statement, "there is no deity but ALLAH (God)." In fact, this phrase is the bedrock of this religion, its foundation and its essence. It is the expression of this belief that differentiates a Muslim from a non-Muslim.

But the difference is not the result of merely chanting of a few words. Evidently, the mere utterance of a phrase or two cannot bring about a significance difference. The real force lies in the conscious acceptance of this doctrine and its stipulations and complete adherence to it in practical life. Thus, unless one knows the real meaning of "there is no Deity but ALLAH (God)" and bearing of its acceptance on human life, one remains unable to be an effective Muslim altogether. Mere repeating of the word "food" cannot full the edge of hunger; mere chanting of a medical prescription cannot heal a patient. In much the same way, if "There is no deity but ALLAH (God)" is repeated without much regard to its content and dictates, it cannot work the metamorphosis which it is meant to bring about. A metamorphosis in thought and in life can occur only if one grasps the full import of the doctrine, realizes its significance, response true belief in it and, more importantly, acts on this belief both in letter and spirit.

The most striking feature of this phrase is that it is simultaneously an assertion and a denial. It asserts the mastery of ALLAH and denies even the mere existence of any alleged other deities, be they human or otherwise. The significant implication of the statement arises from the fact that no human can attribute to himself, or to any other human, the attributes of Providence. No human can be allowed to behave in any fashion so as to impress upon others the idea that he is inherently their superior. Even if one is a ruler; he is simply regarded as an instrument of ALLAH though chosen by the people. He is an instrument of ALLAH because he is the chief executive of ALLAH'S law. The new result of a correct, proper and adequate applications of this doctrine is total freedom of spirit and soul, of body and mind. The one and only master is HE.

'Sin taxes' hit right group

THE ISSUE

The health-care system is being dragged down by illnesses caused by tobacco and alcohol.

WE SUGGEST

Clinton's proposed "sin taxes" make those who hurt the system pay more for it. That's good.

Smoking and drinking alcohol hurts your body.

Lung cancer and cirrhosis of the liver are among the leading killers of Americans. Tobacco alone kills 434,000.

One reason insurance premiums are so high for all Americans is because insurance companies pay billions of dollars in medical payments for the ravages of Americans who drink and smoke.

So, why shouldn't those who do drink and smoke carry more of the economic burden that gets unequally distributed among all Americans?

President Clinton's proposal for increased taxes on tobacco and alcohol, with the revenue going towards a new health-care plan, hits a bullseye.

Is our attitude holier-than-thou? Not really.

The stress of deadlines and writing seem to give the journalism profession way more than the average number of smokers and drinkers.

If anything, the Collegian staff indirectly contributes significantly to the income of the tobacco and alcohol industry and to the health-care crisis.

We believe, however, that if you play, you pay.

Clinton's "sin taxes" are fair and simply put responsibility on those who deserve it.

EGGSHELLS & FLOODS

DAVID
FRESE

Again, driving to Abilene. The home of the Father of the Interstate. Ike-70.

Actually, it is not me driving.

My gender-confused friend is at the wheel. He/She used to live there. His/Her house is seven blocks from the Museum of Independent Telephony.

Her/His house is likewise roughly seven blocks from the Historic Seelye Mansion, erstwhile home to two rich sisters now passed on. As children, the sisters slept in the same bed but never associated with the man who would be president because he came from the wrong side of the tracks.

But we are not there yet. A south wind from a cold sky is blowing the grass, dead and somber.

The sound of wheels. A sign ahead. "Home of Astronaut Joe Engle." Chapman. I have golfed there without membership.

Says my friend, "You ever think about rivers? How you can sit on the shore and all that water flows past? And how even after you leave that water is still flowing past, the same amount of water, everyday. All that water, flowing, all the time?"

Though I do not respond to his question, I have. It is nine miles to Abilene.

The summer of 1992 is tainted by wet underwear and the smell of beef barbecuing. The summer of 1951 is tainted by the shells of boiled eggs.

My mother was 4 then, the summer of '51. She stood outside on upper Pierre and watched the boats cruise down the street because in the summer of '51 the Big Blue River flowed up to her parents' porch.

Cars sat submerged. With the grocer closed, there was no food in the house. Mother's mother boiled some eggs to eat. Mother's father went to get transportation to Waterville. She stood waiting, 4 years old, eating boiled eggs, tossing eggshells into the muddy Big Blue from her porch.

My summer, 1992. I paddled a canoe down Deep Creek. The water was up, way up. Two canoes, four burly outdoors types, a 12-pack, paddles. The frontiersman on point in the canoe ahead of my partner and me screamed every time he had to go under a fallen tree with a spider web.

After rapids had tipped our canoe three times, the creek became aloof. I began to master the paddle as direction became moot in still waters. Trees shaded the stream. Corroded cars without wheels, windows, axles or engines sat dead on the banks, holding back the gnawing mouth of erosion.

There was the smell of the creek, the sound of birds, the squishing of boxer shorts, the water mixing with sweat and a sun getting lower in the sky. Afterwards, we cooked hamburgers in my backyard.

Monday in class. The geographer says Kansas may see a slew of floods this year. The ground is saturated. The reservoirs are full. The water table is up. If our March and April are wet, we may see flooding here, worse downstream.

The geographer turns on the slide projector. A snapshot of a sign in Nebraska states that in May of 1935, the Republican River became a wall of water seven feet high and four miles wide that killed several people, two-thirds of which were never found. The native peoples there warned the settling wasichus that the river did that once in a while. Few listened.

If the Big Blue is to flood again, my apartment will be safe. It is on a big hill. But if winter is to go on at my house, one roommate may kill another. Cabin fever is running high there. The carpet smells like beagle and cigarettes, and effluvium from the kitchen sink makes it easier to order out.

Of myself, I can only say I am wishing for the end of cold. I am tired of drying clothes in a gas dryer. I am tired of studying beside a 60-watt bulb. I am tired of not walking my dog.

So, in Abilene this weekend, I sat on the hood of a white Oldsmobile in a park on the south side of town with a woman and ate peach ice cream.

THE SMART BOMB

You are a bearded, fundamentalist, religious terrorist-in-training. You have been attending a Middle Eastern terrorist school for more than four years now, hoping to graduate before your sponsor decides to set fire to your beard, strap you to a camel and send you loping off into the desert night.

You no longer have hopes of graduating "Allah cum laude." You just want to get out and receive your first assignment. But first, you must pass the final oral exam, which consists of just one question:

"After having just tried to blow up the second largest pile of concrete and glass in the world with a rented van, packed to the dome light with half a ton of dynamite, you would:

a. run like someone was going to set fire to your beard and strap your flaming butt to a camel,

b. order out for pizza,

c. try to collect a $400 deposit from the agency whose van you just vaporized into moon dust."

If you chose the first answer, you are now in charge of an important "terrorist operation." If you chose the last answer, you ARE the operation, because you are going to take the fall for the rest of the your fellow terrorists. Of course, if you chose to order out for pizza, then your beard is set on fire, you are strapped to a camel, and sent off into the desert night looking for the nearest Pizza Hut.

Apparently Mohammed Salameh, the first man arrested last week in connection with the World Trade Center bombing, WAS the operation. Nobody can be that stupid unless it is planned for him to be that stupid.

Either that, or he is completely innocent, and thus "set up." Which makes it a very clever plan indeed.

However, what bothers me about this disaster is how the FBI, the news media and all the self-proclaimed "experts" are publicly dissecting this whole thing. It reminds me of a game we used to play as kids.

My neighborhood pals and I used to play a game we called "dirt clod tag" out in a small field behind my parents' home. The idea was to hide in the tall rows of corn, try to hit your opponent with a dirt clod and not get hit yourself. Not one of the safest games we ever devised, but then my uncle always said we (my friends and I) carried most of our brains in our britches.

The most effective tactic in this game was to stay hidden and not move, all the while randomly lobbing big dirt clods in all directions to get your opponent to change locations. Once you had spotted his movement, you could then zero in and mercilessly launch a barrage of clods upon him, thus forcing a surrender.

The uninitiated in this game would quite often begin the game (from a well hidden position) by saying something challenging to his opponent's male ego like, "Nyah, nyah, nyah." This, of course, would only give away his position and bring the clods in closer, at which point, having just had a near hit, the uninitiated would holler, "Missed me, missed me, now you gotta kiss —" and then POW! A clod would invariably hit him in the side of the head.

It seems to me the more we make clear just how poorly the World Trade Center bombing was planned, the more we invite these guys to try again.

And they will. They will get closer and closer to their intended target until they finally hit it.

And we will be left standing with dirt in our collective hair and a knot on our collective heads just like the kid who never got to finish saying, "Missed me, missed me, now you gotta kiss me."

Unfortunately, we are not playing tag, and I do not think kissing is what these people have in mind.

RESIDENCE HALLS

Hall director guilty of ignoring student sEditor,

I am writing this letter in a half-state of disgust and another half-state of disappointment. I live in Marlatt Hall, and in my two years of associating myself with various Kansas educational institutions, I, out of sheer necessity, had to adjust and accept a certain degree of impersonality and callousness on behalf of their employees.

However unfortunate, I have come upon an incident that even a tolerant person like myself has a right to be angered about.

At 3:10 p.m. Saturday, March 6, I attempted to contact Marlatt/Goodnow Residence Hall Director Dave Yoder about signing myself up for four nights' lodging in the hall over spring break.

He had his office-apartment door wide open and, it being an afternoon, I didn't hesitate to knock on his opened door and ask for such a slight service as to pay $16 and get my name on a list. He promptly informed me, "Not during a basketball game — we're playing!" and "Maybe at halftime. You've got until the 11th."

Mr. Yoder, I want one thing clear — you work for me. You work for all the students in your halls, and you work for K-State.

Performing such a seemingly easy task as a simple sign-up may seem just part of the job for many folks, but not maybe for Mr. Yoder.

I would like to ask for maybe bit more concern, attention and civility the next time I have to deal with Mr. Yoder. In a time of great concern over declining housing statistics, it may be a good idea for certain people in authoritative positions to show genuine interest in the people they serve.

RESPONSE

Jesus was no pushover for punishment

Editor,

Turning the other cheek, as a letter to the editor recently pointed out, is indeed Christ's admonition to us (Matthew 5:39) when dealing with evil people. Nowhere in this scripture, however, does Jesus apply this ethic to criminal law. In fact, earlier in this same chapter, Jesus declares that "not the smallest letter, not the least stroke of a pen, will by any means disappear from the Law" Unless you want to say that Jesus just contradicted himself, I think we can see that this new law of turning the other cheek applies to something else.

If turning the other cheek applies to criminal law, then Jesus must be advocating a lawless society. We should never have any sort of punishment, whether it be restitution, jail or the death penalty, because we should be turning the other cheek when our houses and banks are robbed, our sisters raped, and our society engulfed in murder and malice.

Not. Christ's admonition to us is an ideal of Christian living. We, as Christians, should be so in love with our Lord that we can overlook offenses made against us and be able to forgive and love our enemies. Jesus is not a pushover, however; he recognizes that evil is present in this world. Some attempt must be made to control that evil, as much as is humanly possible. Punishment, therefore, is a legitimate exercise of a civil, just and Godly society.

CAMPUS FIGHT

Those involved should not define the interest

Editor,

How is it that an incident that unfortunately involved two K-State football players went unreported by the Collegian? I would like to answer this in response to the concerns of Michael Klinker.

Michael, how is it that the actions of any other person involved in a brawl goes unreported? Could it be that the actions of "the average student" are not interesting? Maybe it's more interesting to read that, as you stated, a member of a black fraternity or, heaven forbid, a football player, gets involved in something. Are these people different from anyone else? They react to situations like anyone else would.

I feel the Collegian has done an appropriate job of not blowing an unfortunate situation out of proportion. As far as Klinker is concerned, if dirt is what you would like to dig up, please buy the National Enquirer.

Player tells his side of the Union fight

Editor,

How is it that football players are always put in the limelight of negative situations? What everyone doesn't realize is that football players are everyday people just like Michael Klinker. If Klinker got into a fight at Kite's, it wouldn't have made it into the Collegian. Why should Keith Porter and I be put into the paper?

Another thing that burns me up is that it was not an Omega Psi Phi party. The Topeka paper doesn't have all of its facts straight. I was arrested for breaking up a fight between some close friends of mine. I wish that people would get their facts straight before they wreck someone's football career with ignorance. No one printed anything about the white fraternity that got raided for cocaine a couple of months ago.

NATIVE AMERICANS

"Brief mention" not enough for reader

Editor,

Once again, I would like to thank the Collegian in its coverage of Native American Heritage Month.

Aside from a brief mention of it at the beginning of the month, the Collegian has maintained its reporting/coverage ability of previous years and hasn't given it a second thought.

The brief information given early in the month does tell me you do know what's going on and can't use last year's excuse of not being informed. I had hoped for better representation after last year's discussion about Native American Heritage Month.

Congratulations on the "work" and let's keep that high standard of excellence going.

Symposium offers taste of culture

KATHY WASKO
Collegian

K-State will be host to a symposium featuring work by K-State professors, bringing in authors from seven different states. The symposium begins today.

The second annual symposium is called "Money, Space, and Culture." It is sponsored by the cultural studies program with support from the College of Arts and Sciences and the departments of English, philosophy, political science, women's studies and economics.

"There has been a lot of speculation that the current era is sometimes called that of post-modernism. Space is increasingly important on a global scale such as relations between first- and third-world countries, as well as space in relation to city and suburb," speaker Tim Dayton, assistant professor of English, said.

"We want to increase awareness and reflect that a lot of people are thinking about space and its relationship to culture and to economics a lot more."

Dayton said one of the main reasons for the symposium is to give students and others in Manhattan exposure to new topics.

"We also want to help people get out the work they're doing and to try to increase the level of scholarly and intellectual activity here in Manhattan," Dayton said.

The symposium is organized into panels and sessions on different topics. There will be subjects ranging from traditional literary topics to Star Trek and Disneyland.

"It will be quite interdisciplinary. Even though the program in cultural studies is in English, we've got people coming in from many different fields," Linda Brigham, assistant professor in English, said.

■ The symposium will begin at 2 p.m. Thursday, and events will continue through Saturday. The sessions will be located in Union rooms 206 and 212 and in Denison 113A. Admission is free.

"This is the first year that we have gone nationwide for conference participants beyond the main speakers."

"I will be giving a paper on money and reference — how money forces us to live in community and isolates us from each other," she said.

Architect presents award-winning designs

JULIE CORBIN

Approximately 150 students and faculty attended an Oscar Ekdahl Memorial Lecture given by Thomas Beeby Wednesday afternoon.

Beeby was dean of the Yale University School of Architecture from 1985-1992. Before then he was director of the School of Architecture at the University of Illinois at Chicago and an associate professor at the Illinois Institute of Technology.

Beeby presented slides of three recent projects completed by the firm of Hammond, Beeby and Babka Inc. of Chicago, of which he is principal and director. He explained conditions and situations that occurred with each project.

The projects discussed were the Art Institute of Chicago, a camp for children with life-threatening diseases founded by Paul Newman, and the Chicago Public Library.

Beeby included slides of the children in Newman's camp, which was designed to provide a camp experience for the children without the institutional nightmares they had previously experienced.

"The entire event was completed very quickly. The plans were drawn up, and everything built within 19 months. It was a communal effort," Beeby said. "It was a very moving project to be involved in."

TCI needs to pick up the Royals

It's that wondrous time of the year again. Men are transformed into little boys again, and little boys are dreaming of catching foul balls at the game.

Yes, it's that marvelous thing called spring training, letting us know that opening day is less than a month away.

Normally, I'd be one of the happiest people around because the boys in blue are about to take the field, and thanks to the wonders of technology, I could catch about 65 games on the tube.

Not this year.

For those who don't know, the Royals have switched TV stations in Kansas City, going from WDAF to KSMO.

And that's where the problem for area Royals fans begins.

You see, TCI of Kansas doesn't want to pick up KSMO. Instead, they're retaining WDAF, a station that they almost dropped from cable service two years ago.

Meanwhile, WIBW in Topeka will carry only 30 games, leaving 35 games unavailable to Royals faithfuls in Manhattan and Topeka.

When TCI tried to drop WDAF, Royals fans here in town helped save it with a massive letter and phone campaign, forcing the company to keep it available.

It's time for that type of campaign again.

Now, for the non-baseball fan, KSMO can offer you something other than the usual TV fare.

KSMO is independent of any network, offering movies most of the time. Instead of getting a premium service for movies, you could catch some without paying extra.

Hockey fans could catch a few Kansas City Blades games here and there.

Kids (both young and old) could have another option for cartoons in the afternoon.

And baseball fans could watch the Royals — and turn the sound down to avoid hearing Dave "Wow!" Armstrong.

WDAF, on the other hand, will just offer duplicate programming of other stations available.

Cable subscribers in this town don't need three NBC affiliates — especially when two of them are back-to-back (KSNT and KSNW).

Even if TCI doesn't pick up KSMO, it needs to do something about carrying the games that are unavailable to this market.

WIBW and K6KZ-TV in Junction City reached agreement that K6KZ will carry games that WIBW doesn't.

Why can't TCI come up with a deal like that? Heck, they could put the games on channel 6, a.k.a. "The Mind-Extension Network." It's not like anyone is really watching the current programming on that channel.

But, no matter how it gets done, TCI needs to put those "unavailable" telecasts somewhere, or they'll just encourage more bad feelings from people who already feel they're overcharged and shortchanged.

Brooks alleges police brutality

Football player says RCPD used excessive force during arrest

STEVEN ROCK

Collegian

In the wake of the early Sunday morning arrests of two K-State football players, Wildcat offensive lineman Barrett Brooks has alleged police brutality and racism against the Riley County Police Department.

Alpha Phi Alpha, a black fraternity, sponsored a party Saturday night in the K-State Union ballroom. Around 2 a.m., Brooks and Keith Porter, a freshman cornerback for K-State, were both arrested by the RCPD.

And Brooks — a member of the Omega Psi Phi black fraternity who said he was trying to break up the fight — said the RCPD used excessive force.

"The police just rushed us," he said. "The police department saw a big, black male, and they were intimidated."

"I felt as though we were treated wrong. They threw Keith against a pole. Then they threw him on the floor and choked him. They were choking him with the billy club."

"One police officer hit me from behind," Brooks said. "I was just standing there, and they just came up and hit me. There was no reason for all of that."

"They wouldn't have done all of that if it would have been a white fraternity."

Brooks said no white men were involved in the fight.

"Except for the policemen beating on us," he said.

But RCPD Captain Buddy Mayes said the police officers did only what they had to do.

"If somebody is out there making allegations, I'm not sure how we're going to respond to those things," he said. "There are certain actions that police officers take that could be perceived to the public as police brutality."

But Alvin Johnson, the director of the RCPD, said the police may have actually been the victims of brutality.

"One of the individuals ran directly at the officer, apparently trying to knock him down," Johnson said. "This individual then ran toward the officer and hit the officer in the back of the head without the officer's knowledge."

"We had several officers go to the hospital that night, but I don't think he was one of them. But the arrests were made with a minimal amount of force used."

Brooks was charged with disorderly conduct. Porter was charged with disorderly conduct and battery to a law enforcement officer.

"That was just incidental contact," Brooks said.

Porter could not be reached for comment.

The fight allegedly occurred as a result of a misunderstanding about a leather jacket. Two individuals apparently had the same jacket. When one of the men put his on and started to leave, the other thought his jacket was being stolen.

Pushing and yelling ensued, and a brawl broke out. K-State police were called to control the situation, but the three officers couldn't keep the fight under control.

"It was just a misunderstanding," Brooks said. "This is not a Utopian society, and these contradictory viewpoints led to a fight."

The RCPD sent 13 officers to the Union to establish control, and Johnson said 200-300 people were involved. He also said there were several fights going on at the same time, including in the parking lot.

"They only had three officers working," Johnson said of the K-State police. "They called for all of the help they could find. I'm sure they found it quite overwhelming."

Charles Beckom, captain of the K-State police department, said a police officer was stationed outside of the party for the entire duration in the event of a problem.

"For most functions, there is a potential for problems," he said.

"If an officer attempts to arrest someone, it puts both of them in a volatile situation," he said. "But nobody's walked in here and said that he's been mistreated. I think people need to understand that when people get arrested, it's not 'please' and 'thank you.'"

Reggie Blackwell, president of Omega Psi Phi and a defensive end on the football team, said the party was under control when he left at 12:30 a.m.

"Everything was fine," he said. "I didn't think it would be a problem."

"Barrett didn't say a lot about aggressive force, but he said there was an excessive number of them grabbing him. That's basically all I know."

The three officers who made the arrest were James Wilkins, Lloyd Jahns and Eric Sauer, the RCPD said. None of the three could be reached for comment.

"They wouldn't be allowed to make any comments anyway because the case is still pending in court," Johnson said.

Jayson Strickland, president of Alpha Phi Alpha — which put on the party — said no alcohol was served at the party in the Union ballroom.

Sutton edges Altman for AP coach of year

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Oklahoma State's Eddie Sutton received 10 votes from a panel of media representatives Wednesday, edging out K-State's Dana Altman for the Associated Press' Big Eight coach of the year.

Altman received four votes. He was followed by Nebraska's Danny Nee and Kansas' Roy Williams, each of who received just one vote.

Like just about everybody else, Sutton didn't think Oklahoma State was very good when the season began.

The team's 1-3 record was a good indication everybody was right. Sutton thought his team had the potential to be something special, however, and he was right.

Bryant Reeves blossomed into the most dominant player in the conference. Transfer Brooks Thompson learned to play point guard, turning a December weakness into a February strength.

The Cowboys won 19 games and finished in a three-way tie for second behind Kansas in the conference race. And Sutton, who has already been coach of the year in two other leagues, was named the AP Big Eight coach of the year.

"This has been a very satisfying season for me," he said. "Every coach wants to see his team improve as the season

K-State coach, newcomer honored in coaches' poll

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Big Eight coaches selected Wildcat point guard Anthony Beane as the conference's newcomer of the year, the Big Eight announced Wednesday.

And K-State's head coach Dana Altman — who thwarted pre-season picks that tabbed the Wildcats as the seventh-place team in the conference — was selected by the coaches as the coach of the year.

Beane, a junior transfer from Three Rivers Community College who also made the coaches' second team, led the Wildcats with 64 assists. His 4.6 assist-per-game average ranked third in the conference.

Early in the season, Altman seemed to be a shoe-in for the coach of the year honor. He led his overachieving Wildcats to a 4-1 start in conference play.

Among those four victories was a victory against Sutton's Oklahoma State — it was just the second loss for Sutton at Gallagher-Iba Arena in 36 games — and a home win against Oklahoma that thrust the Cats into the AP poll for the first time in three years.

Sophomore Bryant Reeves of Oklahoma State and six other underclassmen were named to the first Big Eight coaches men's basketball team.

Reeves, who led the Big Eight in scoring and rebounds, is joined by juniors Melvin Booker of Missouri and Eric Piatkowski of Nebraska and seniors Rex Walters of Kansas and Justus Thigpen of Iowa State.

On the second team, Big Eight career three-point field goal leader Terry Evans of Oklahoma is the only senior among the coaches' choices. Sophomore Donnie Hoyce of Colorado and juniors Anthony Beane of K-State, Steve Woodberry of Kansas and Jeff Webster of Oklahoma round out the second team.

Nebraska freshman Erick Strickland was selected as freshman of the year after playing every game for the Cornhuskers.

The Big Eight Coaches player of the year will be announced Thursday.

SPORTS DIGEST

►CATS DROP 2ND STRAIGHT TO WSU

Richie Taylor's two-run single highlighted a six-run second inning as Wichita State beat K-State 7-2 Wednesday night.

Taylor had three RBI, and right-fielder Carl Hall contributed two hits, two runs and an RBI for the Shockers (8-2).

Mike Brandley (2-0) picked up the victory, allowing five hits and one run over six innings. Jaime Bluma pitched the final 1-1/3 innings to pick up his second save.

Brian Morrow and Brian Culp had two hits apiece for K-State (3-5).

Dan Driskill (1-2) suffered the loss despite striking out eight. Driskill gave up seven runs and four hits over seven innings.

►WOMEN GOLFERS CAPTURE 12TH

The Wildcat women's golf team began its 1993 spring season by placing 12th out of 19 teams at the 18th annual Peggy Kirk Bell Invitational in Orlando, Fla., shooting a three-round total of 1,013.

Senior Valerie Hahn led the Wildcats, placing 18th in the tournament with a three-round total of 241. Sophomore Jacque Wright shot a career-best 245 and finished in a four-way tie for 27th. Junior Denise Pottle shot a 246. Freshman Trisha Hoover finished in 91st place with a 283, and freshman Debbie Chrystal finished two strokes behind Hoover for 92nd place.

The women compete in the Northern Illinois Snowbird Invitational today and tomorrow in Tampa, Fla.

FACULTY SENATE

Resolution allows leadership choice

DAVE OLSON
Collegian

Faculty Senate on Tuesday approved a resolution allowing University departments to be led by a chairperson rather than a department head.

Department heads are appointed by the deans with advice from the faculty. Chairpersons, however, would be elected by the faculty in the departments with the approval of the deans.

Kenneth Klabunde, professor of chemistry and a former department head, said the move signifies more than a change in title.

"A department run by a chair tends to be more democratic," he said. "As I look around the country, more universities we would like to emulate have switched to chairmanships."

Klabunde said that while a chair would be elected for one or two three-year terms, "a head is more or less permanent."

He said one advantage of this is that chairs would be more involved in classes and research projects.

"Heads often tend to think like it's going to be their last job and ignore teaching and research," Klabunde said. "It's better to keep people connected to the faculty and students."

Student Senate faculty Sen. Phil Anderson, instructor of speech, said the resolution formalizes what has already taken place in the College of Education.

"I think it's good for the University to have this kind of option," Anderson said.

Brad Fenwick, president of Faculty Senate and an associate professor of pathology and microbiology, said individual departments will have to decide which form of leadership is more effective for them.

"In some areas, chairs will be more appropriate. In other areas,

Branch Davidians cause world to take hard look at cults

What may be seen as cult activity to some may be seen as normal to others

RON LACKEY
Collegian

The recent conflict in Waco, Texas, between the Branch Davidians and the Bureau of Alcohol Tobacco and Firearms has induced many people to take a hard look at cults in America.

Martin Ottenheimer, professor of sociology, said the word cult has different meanings to different people.

"Cult is a very value-laden term, and it has many different meanings. One author put it nicely: 'It is a term most often used by members of one religious group to describe a competing or heretical religion of which they disapprove.' It has come to have a very negative connotation. I try to avoid using the term," he said.

Ottenheimer said cults aren't as strange as some people think.

"Cults have been around for as long as there have been people," he said.

He said most cults are based on the belief of a second coming.

"These are apocalyptic sects in which people talk of the end of the world as we know it. It is simply an alternative religion, and in that sense they have been around for thousands of years."

He said there are many kinds of cults, and some are healthy.

"If you want to stretch the analogy, sects are like mutations in biology — some are alternatives in life. Some are good, and some are not so good," he said.

The problem, Ottenheimer said, is what is seen as cult activity to one group is normal to another.

"People come from different parts of the world with different religious practices. These practices are viewed with a certain amount of horror by people in and around here, but some of these practices are normal in other countries. This will happen any time you have two different cultures in one place."

The Manhattan area is not exempt from strange cult practices.

"The number of reports of animal mutilations for the last two years has risen locally, but there has never been any proof of it being caused by cult activity," Ottenheimer said.

There is no prerequisite for joining a cult, he said.

"All types of people join cults. The people who do are searching for something. They are usually missing something in their lives," he said.

"People in cults come from all sorts of backgrounds. These are people who are dissatisfied with life and are looking for an alternative."

Ottenheimer said the press often views cults in a negative light.

"The press wants us to treat them as strange oddities. They are a factor of life, and in complex societies they're quite an intricate part of social life."

He said Kansas has its own share of cult activity.

"I know of several dozen cults in Kansas," Ottenheimer said, "but they are all benign. Most are looking for an alternative way of life. These people are usually just displeased with life."

Although groups like this are usually harmless, their secrecy makes it difficult for law enforcement agencies to predict or detect wrongdoing.

"We don't know how many survivalists in Kansas are as well equipped as in Waco, Texas," Ottenheimer said.

Robert Linder, professor of history and religion historian, said the word cult is used loosely.

"The term cult is out of favor with scholars. It's not politically correct. They are supposed to be called new religions," he said.

Linder said all cults have four characteristics.

"All of these groups have four main characteristics: a dominant, authoritarian leader, an authoritarian structure of governance, considerable secrecy and major beliefs outside of mainstream society."

"Almost every community has a group with cult-like tendencies."

Linder said most cults begin in the same fashion.

"They begin with an authoritarian leader and the other three characteristics of a cult. Then they begin to moderate towards mainstream. They will have a split in their beliefs and will usually have a fight between the moderates and fundamentalists. The fundamentalist will splinter off and develop in their own way."

The splinter groups usually mean the changing of beliefs, Linder said.

"Cults are dynamic. They attract people and satisfy a need. They are either going mainstream or off into another direction," he said.

Linder said the standoff in Waco, Texas, by what he called a "splinter of a splinter of the Seventh Day Adventists," has happened before but on a much larger scale.

"This same thing happened in 1534 when a cult group took over the city, and they had to be starved out. The leaders of that group took more than one wife, sired many children and lived communally."

heads will be more appropriate," Fenwick said.

Klabunde said he expects half the departments in the College of Arts and Sciences will switch to chairmanships.

Donald Mrozek, head of the history department, said he does not believe such a switch would be much of a change to his department.

"I don't regard myself as a boss in relation with other faculty," he said. "I regard myself as a representative of faculty views."

"In that sense, I already function as a chair."

Jim Ragan, head of the Department of Economics, said some faculty supported the change because they believed it would make payment for leadership more equitable. But Ragan did not agree.

"I don't think that's generally the case," Ragan said.

Ragan said department heads tend to have higher-than-average salaries, but that this was not because of their position.

"Heads are constrained to have no larger average pay increase than the average faculty," he said. "As a general rule, the people who became heads made greater than average salaries before."

"I think they're being penalized for being heads."

An amendment that would have eliminated the need for a chair to be approved by the dean did not obtain the two-thirds majority needed to pass Senate.

"It just barely failed, and there's a message in that, I think," Fenwick said.

Skoog, Henry announce candidacy ing permit, and also pay to park in the garage, Henry said.

Some campus landscape changes might be brought about if Skoog and Henry are elected.

"At the least, we should close off the streets, tear them up and sod them to have less concrete on campus," Skoog said.

"We're thinking of damming up the south end of the Old Stadium, making it a ice rink or a bass pond," Henry said.

"Or we could have both," Skoog added.

But back to the issues. Skoog said he opposes qualified admissions into the Kansas Board of Regents system.

"Qualified admissions would be advantageous, for KU. K-State, Pittsburg State could be damaged by qualified admissions. I am a Kansas high-school graduate. I deserve to go to a Kansas school."

Ideally, we'd like to keep from having it at all," Skoog.

The increase of the athletic fee sparked criticism from Skoog.

"We were trying to block the athletic fee. It increased by $7, and we got nothing in return for it. We should have free tickets for the students. It's very sensible," Skoog said.

"Other campuses do it. There should be a student section. Students get in with their ID, and it's first come, first serve. After that, they have to buy a ticket."

They also said they were opposed to restricted fees.

"There is a fee that would add a 5 percent fee on top of everything to enhance faculty salaries," Skoog said. "I admit faculty salaries are low, but there shouldn't be an extra fee."

Skoog then changed gears again, provoking laughter from the audience.

"Now to the issue of Freshman Beanies. Freshmen really need to be beanieed," Skoog said.

"Well, nothing's really firm yet, but we're kicking around the idea of requiring freshmen to wear a beanie, the color of their choice, with or without propellers, one day of the week," Henry said.

"It would perhaps be subsidized by the administration," Skoog said. "Bob Krause is a big fan of it."

In closing, the two said they want to encourage new blood to get involved in Senate.

"A way to do that would be to join the Wild Turke Workers Party," Skoog said.

There's room for everybody in the party, Henry said.

"Although we have not been effective in Senate, we have been loud and obnoxious, which is a good substitute," Skoog said.

Gays in the military debated in forum

David Ringle, junior in biology, said he did not condone homosexual behavior but thought gays should be treated equally.

"It's a case of human rights," he said.

Catherine Eschbach, an E4 specialist at Fort Riley, said although she did not think restricting gays was right, the rank structure of the military would suffer due to uncomfortable situations that may arise concerning homosexual and heterosexual men in the same small quarters.

Being aware of others was one suggestion she gave on solving the problem.

"We need to teach people to get over their fears," Eschbach said.

Brooks says RCPD used excessive force when breaking up brawl at Union

"I was in the ballroom at that particular time," he said. "I'm not giving any statement about it at all."

There has been speculation that the entire football team was going to be disciplined for the incident in which other football players were involved as well, including wide receiver Andre Coleman.

"They can't fault the whole team just because a couple of individuals stray away from the team unit," Brooks said. "You can't jeopardize the whole team."

"Coach (Bill) Snyder is teaching us right from wrong. He thinks of us as a family unit. He's just taking care of the family. That's why there have been no incidents in the football program since Coach Snyder has been here."

Blackwell didn't say whether disciplinary actions have been taken.

"That's something I'd rather not comment on," he said.

Johnson said he was surprised to hear accusations of racism.

"How could there have been racism involved?" he said. "There were no accusations made that night."

"At least one of them, if not both, came back and apologized to the officers," he said. "Not many of us like to accept the responsibilities of our actions."

Sutton captures AP coach of year honors

wants his team as best they can to maximize their abilities. And I think this team has done those things. I didn't think we were very good when we started, but that we had some potential."

Sutton, one of the prize pupils of the late Henry Iba as a player at Oklahoma State, has now been coach of the year in the Southwest Conference, Southeastern Conference and the Big Eight.

He goes into the postseason with an overall record of 501-187.

"It's always exciting to receive recognition such as this," he said. "But too often, the head coach gets too much praise when a team has success. Our assistants did a marvelous job. Then we had some pretty good players who matured along the way."

One of Sutton's assistants, Bill Self, was named head coach this week at Oral Roberts University.

"Our assistants did a terrific job this year," Sutton said. "I've never wanted to have an assistant on my staff at any school I ever was at that I didn't think had the ability to one day be a head coach."

Sutton has personally seen too much of the schooling of the 7-foot Reeves, who was so raw and unrefined as a high schooler at tiny Gans, Okla., that most coaches did not even offer a scholarship.

It was a mistake Sutton did not make. But Sutton does admit to one misjudgment — he had no idea Reeves would be this good this quickly.

"I marvel at the progress he's made in such a short amount of time," Sutton said. "Of all the great players we have in the Big Eight, to lead the league in scoring, rebounding and field-goal percentage is really a marvelous achievement."

Sutton's milestone 500th victory came against Kansas State in a game that kept the Cowboys in contention for the Big Eight title in the final weeks of the season.

"I have enjoyed myself everywhere I've coached — Tulsa Central, Southern Idaho, Creighton, certainly 11 years at Arkansas," Sutton said. "It's great to be back at OSU. Every coach in the back of their mind dreams about going back to his alma mater and coaching. I never thought it would happen."

STUDENTS ELECTED TO SERVE STUDENTS

The April elections held by KSU Student Government will include six positions to the K-State Union Governing Board. Four of these positions are one-year terms and two are for two-year terms.

You should consider candidacy for one of these positions if you have talent and a few hours available each month to contribute to bettering the K-State Union operation.

The K-State Union Governing Board (UGB) is an organization of ten students, three faculty members, and one alumni appointee (usually a student). The purpose of UGB is to serve as the general governing and policy-making body of the K-State Union. The Board works with the K-State Union staff to help the K-State Union best serve the Kansas State University student and University community. Meetings are held 5:30 p.m. to 7:00 p.m. on the first Thursday of each month.

Filing information is available in the Student Government Office or in the Union Director's Office.

An informational meeting is scheduled for Tuesday, March 16, 1993 at 7:00 p.m. in the K-State Union Big 8 Room.

Slam St. Joan is back

TRACY ARNOLD
Collegian

They're back. Chicago-based Slam St. Joan is back to rock 'n' roll patrons at Boulevard's 11th Street Bar & Grill Friday and Saturday nights.

"Fans can count on Slam St. Joan to satisfy their desire for real hard rock in the vein of great '70s rock bands but with enough of a contemporary feel to make it commercially acceptable in the '90s," said Preston Clark, artist development of Heart and Soul records.

Richie Rodriguez, drummer from Slam St. Joan, said the band canceled its gig in Kansas City due to illness. They are, however, looking forward to coming to Manhattan, he said.

"We don't compare ourselves to anyone else," Rodriguez said.

"Some people say our music is of the Skid Row and Bulletboys type. Sure, they are influences like Tesla is, but our music sounds like us. When you hear the Damn Yankees, you know it's the Damn Yankees. We play new music. When you hear Slam St. Joan, it's Slam St. Joan."

The band, which Clark describes as a "real honest, straight up, no frills rock 'n' roll band," will have a compact disc out in mid-April. The CD will contain 12 songs and be released to about 500 radio stations nationwide. A national distribution deal is now being worked on.

The album is entitled "Saved by Grace." There is also a song with that title on the album, Rodriguez said.

"After I heard eight tracks from the album, I said, 'This is gonna be good,'" Jim Burnett, manager Boulevard's, said.

Burnett said he expects a good crowd both nights.

When Slam St. Joan was at Boulevard's in December, there was competition with a big concert in Salina. There's none of that this time, he said.

Most of the bands show will be originals, along with a few covers. One cover done last time, for example, was a song by Kansas City band Loud Sounding Dream.

"There's no hair spray or leather here, just guys rocking out," Clark said.

The band members are Rob Creek on lead vocals, George Karl and Ray Rodriguez on guitar, Rich Dane on bass guitar and Richie Rodriguez on drums. Yes, Ray and Richie are brothers.

"We're about rock 'n' roll and good times. We're serious about our music," Rodriguez said.

Burnett said he is confident the show will be a success.

"See them now before you can't see them anymore, except for on TV," he said.

You can't lead a horse to culture

DEAR CASSANDRA,

How can I get my juniors and seniors to take advantage of the myriad of educational and cultural opportunities on campus?

The University invests an unbelievable amount of time, money and energy in lectures, performances, films, demonstrations, exhibits, etc. to announce that "schooling = education."

Yet I believe my juniors and seniors are apathetic and indifferent to these marvelously broadening, enlightening, inspirational and provocative opportunities.

How can K-State faculty increase student interest in such opportunities?

Sincerely,

A Concerned Professor

DEAR PROF,

You bring up an excellent and sad point. Probably at no other time in their lives will students be able to enjoy such a wide range of stimulating, entertaining and thought-provoking fare as they will during their college years. Too many wonderful events are woefully under-attended and under-appreciated.

How can faculty help? As the saying goes, you can lead a horse to water, but you can't make him or her drink. I would suggest that concerned faculty take a few seconds in class and remind students of upcoming events and provide a brief description. If the event is germane to your area of instruction, tell students what they can expect. But don't try to bribe them with extra credit. It's not fair to your course, the student or the University's guest.

Students, a common regret expressed by many, many graduates is that they failed to take advantage of the myriad of extracurricular opportunities while they were in school. Don't let this happen to you.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

What happened to those snotty, bitchy, get-a-grip Cassandra responses I had come to depend on to start my day with a smile? Have you been replaced by a vapid, "have-a-nice-day" automaton?

Sincerely,

Missing The Old Snothead

DEAR SNOTHEAD,

How I respond to letters is my business, not yours, dearie.

Automaton? What the hell does that mean? I'll bet you spent half the morning thumbing through your pocket thesaurus finding that one.

Anyway, thanks for taking the time to write, dork.

I'm just kidding, you sound like a nice person. Have a wonderful day, and go out of your way to make a special new friend.

Couple shares racing passion

Married
Manhattan racing team Bill and Lisa Noble will spend 10 months of the year competing with their Formula V cars at tracks across the nation. Bill began racing in 1969 and Lisa a few years later. The racing family also includes their 12-year-old daughter, Jaime, who is a member of their pit crews.

Pair has raced cars for 15 years, both have won national events

When Bill and Lisa Noble married in 1979, Bill knew that his bride liked auto racing. He did not know that almost 15 years later she would be such a challenging competitor.

While both Bill and Lisa are accomplished in many sports, they have made Formula V auto racing their business.

Bill is a three-time Sports Car Club of America national champion, and Lisa became the first woman to win a national Formula V event in 1991.

She was introduced to the race track by a boyfriend when she was 14 years old and took an interest in it right away. She soon learned to keep time and do other jobs around the pits.

"The boyfriend is long gone, and I'm still with it," Lisa said.

After she met Bill at the race track, he taught her about driving. Soon after they were married, Lisa completed regional race driver's school and became a certified driver.

Lisa said after she got her license, she was fearless and ready to take on any track.

In 1981, however, a crash at Ponca City, Okla., showed Lisa that she wasn't as invincible as she thought.

"I ran into a tree at about 100 mph and broke my collar bone," Lisa said.

Lisa said at the time of the crash, Bill was still racing and didn't know that it was her who had wrecked.

Bill's first instinct was to stop and see if she was hurt, but after other people gave him the thumbs-up, indicating that Lisa was fine, he went on to win the race.

"I would have been very upset if he hadn't gone on to finish," Lisa said.

With a broken collar bone and a one-year-old daughter to take care of, Lisa said she decided to give up racing for a while. Until 1990, she was Bill's crew chief.

From the time Jaime Noble was born, she was a part of what has become the family pastime.

Jaime went to her first race when she was nine days old and traveled more than 25,000 miles to various race tracks before her first birthday, Lisa said.

"The first year was easy because she slept a lot, but after that it took a lot of creativity to keep her occupied," Lisa said.

Jaime is now 12 years old and goes with her parents to every race. Lisa said she is working hard to get her timing and scoring license so she can be more help around the track.

"She is a really good student and goes with us everywhere we go," Lisa said. "We race in Florida for two to three weeks every January, so we try to make it a family vacation."

The Noble racing team competes all over the country 18 to 20 weekends out of the season, which runs from January to October.

This season, they are scheduled to compete in Florida, Texas, Wisconsin, New York, San Francisco, North Carolina, Georgia and, of Banners, election debated

MICHELLE ROGERS
Collegian

Revisions to the Student Governing Association's campaign regulations were discussed the majority of the time in Student Senate's meeting Thursday.

The original bill presented to Senate contained both revisions to campaign regulations and campaign expenditure regulations.

The original bill then was sent back to the Elections Committee in last week's Senate meeting and separated into two bills, each addressing one aspect of the original.

The first bill passed revised the SGA campaign regulations and expenditure regulations for the upcoming election.

This bill addressed the hanging of banners and campaign literature.

Literature may not be distributed in K-State residence halls or the K-State Union.

Banners may only be used by candidates for student body president and vice-president. The areas the banners may be hung will be used on a rotating basis and will be drawn out of a hat.

The bill also revised the amount of money a candidate may spend on the campaign materials.

The combined student body president and vice president campaign may spend in the general election an amount equal to the tuition paid by a full-time, undergraduate, in-state student for one semester.

Candidates for Senate, Board of Student Publications or Union Governing Board may spend one-tenth of the tuition paid by a full-time, undergraduate, in-state student for one semester.

The bill addressing revisions to SGA campaign regulations, specifically whether party campaigning will be permitted, was still in debate at press time.

The debate at press time was focused on advertising and how it will be divided among the candidates who are running under a party.

Later Thursday evening, in first readings, Senate brought up a bill concerning a special allocation to the International Coordinating Council for the Society for the Promotion of Indian Classical Music and Culture Among Youth, SPIC-MACAY, for a musician.

SPIC-MACAY asked for $2,548 to pay for a musician who will give a concert at 6 p.m. April 18 in Union Forum Hall. The admission is free, and the concert will be open to the public.

Also in first reading was a bill calling for a reduction of the student health fee, and a resolution that would allow tobacco in the Union.

Currently, the student health fee per semester is $80 for full-time students, $25 for part-time, and $5 for summer students. The fee per semester will be decreased to $76 for full-time students, $23.75 for part-time students and $4.75 for summer students. If passed this fee will be reviewed prior to the 1997 fiscal year.

Senate also voted on constitutional revisions and a by-laws revision.

Week planned for agricultural awareness

JENNIFER SWANSON
Collegian

"Growing Stronger Every Day" is the theme for the 20th Annual National Agriculture Week, March 14-20, which is designed to recognize the people who provide food and fiber for the United States and other countries.

Ag Week helps people understand agriculture's importance in providing food, clothing and shelter, the three basic needs of mankind, said David Mugler, associate dean of agriculture.

"It is important for those in agriculture and those who are not to reflect on where their food comes from," Mugler said. "It is also important to remember that agriculture is our nation's No. 1 industry."

Kansas' agriculture is closely tied to K-State's College of Agriculture through the agricultural experiment station, the cooperative extension service and academic programs, Mugler said.

"The leading industry in Kansas is agriculture, and that dictates that our land-grant university has a strong purpose of serving the needs of the agriculture industry," Mugler said.

Although no activities have been planned on campus for the week, some are planned for other areas of the state.

Sam Brownback, Kansas secretary of agriculture, has scheduled March 18 as Kansas City Ag Day, said John Riley, assistant director of agriculture academic programs.

The distribution of loaves of white and wheat bread at 10 different locations in Kansas City will lead off the festivities, Riley said.

The bread, in biodegradable cornstarch bags, is to be distributed by National Agriculture Marketing Association members and agribusiness students at Kansas City East High School.

Mayors of Kansas City, Kan., and Kansas City, Mo., will sign a joint Ag Day declaration, Riley said. The keynote speaker will be the free trade agreement adviser from the Mexican embassy in Washington, D.C.

To cap off the day, a NAMA Agriculture Forum will be at the American Royal complex in Kansas City.

Agriculture Week concludes with National Agriculture Day on March 20, the first day of spring.

National Agriculture Day always corresponds with the first day of spring. Mugler said this is logical because farmers' thoughts turn more to agriculture production as they head into spring.

The Kansas Foundation for Agriculture in the Classroom Week, which traditionally coincides with Ag Week, honors agriculture and raises awareness of agricultural activities in Kansas schools, said Sharon Tally, Kansas Foundation for Ag

House passes bill banning immigrants with AIDS

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The House overwhelmingly endorsed a ban on AIDS-infected immigrants Thursday, handing President Clinton his second lopsided defeat on the issue. The White House appeared ready to surrender.

"Congress' intent on this is becoming clear," White House spokeswoman Dee Dee Myers said before the House voted 356-58 to express its support for the ban.

"The president has to work with Congress. He can't act unilaterally on issues like this," Myers said, indicating the White House was ready to give in, even though Clinton doesn't think immigrants or refugees should be turned away because they're infected with HIV.

Last month, the Senate added the AIDS ban to a spending bill for the National Institutes of Health.

The House did not include the ban in its version of the NIH bill. But the vote Thursday directed House negotiators, who will work out differences on the NIH bill with the Senate, to accept the Senate version on the AIDS immigrant issue.

The overall bill passed the House Thursday by a 283-131 vote.

Supporters of the ban hoped to gain some leverage over Clinton by linking the measure to the NIH bill. Clinton repeatedly campaigned for the NIH funding, and criticized former President Bush for vetoing the bill for political reasons.

The White House had indicated Clinton would not likely veto the legislation.

"To hold up funding for the National Institutes of Health when it contains much-needed funding for breast and ovarian cancer and osteoporosis and other research is a serious, serious thing," Myers said.

Myers said the White House would wait and see how the bill ultimately comes to the president, but she noted the sentiment in the House and Senate was

NEWS DIGEST

►RENO RECEIVES UNANIMOUS VOTE

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate unanimously confirmed Janet Reno Thursday as the nation's first female attorney general, completing the Clinton Cabinet and bringing fresh leadership to a Justice Department led by a Bush holdover.

Applause broke out in the normally decorous Senate chamber when the 98-0 vote was announced, making Reno the government's top law enforcement officer.

"It's an extraordinary experience, and I hope I do the women of America proud," Reno said at the White House, where Clinton asked her to stop by after the Senate's unanimous vote.

A host of problems, ranging from a terrorist bombing in New York to questions about the FBI director in her own department, await the 54-year-old South Florida prosecutor. She is expected to be sworn in next week.

President Clinton should be commended for taking yet another step in opening new opportunities for women and minorities," Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, said in the brief discussion that preceded the vote.

Reno's cakewalk through the constitutional advise-and-consent process closed the book on a Clinton Cabinet-selection process that got under way not long after his election last November.

"I would submit that President Clinton has hit a home run," Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., said.

Steve Benz, sophomore in biology, spends time with his two-year-old Burmese python Thursday afternoon outside his apartment. Although Malcolm, the snake, currently measures 4 feet long, Benz said he plans to feed him twice as much so he might grow to his full potential — 12 feet.

PECULIAR PETS

by Dave Olson

Pigs and ferrets and lizards — oh my! Many K-State students are taking in exotic animals as pets. The problem is, some may not be aware of the animals' needs.

"People in apartments and in the city are finding exotic pets easier to take care of, and some people like the idea of owning something different," James Carpenter, associate professor of clinical sciences at the College of Veterinary Medicine, said.

Unfortunately, Carpenter said, many people do not really know how to care for their pets once they get them.

"There are major differences between the management of domestic and exotic animals," Carpenter said. "Exotic pet owners need to be aware of these differences."

Carpenter said most people with exotic pets mean well but are not given the information they need to keep their pets healthy.

He said some problems are simply a matter of proper diet. For example, he said he has heard of some people keeping large, wild cats and feeding them chicken necks. This can lead to bone problems due to poor nutrition.

Another common problem Carpenter said he has seen is reptiles that are not kept at the proper temperature. Because they are cold-blooded, reptiles must have the proper amount of heat to remain active and digest their food properly, he said.

Steve Benz, sophomore in biology, said there are many things reptile owners should be aware of.

He suggested buying a heat rock to help the animal maintain its body temperature. He also recommended fluorescent lights for lizard tanks instead of light bulbs.

"They'll get too close to the bulb, trying to get warm, and it will just fry them," Benz said.

He said mites can be another problem for reptiles, especially snakes. Mites are small insects that burrow into skin, much like ticks.

Benz said mites are commonly found on tree branches and sticks many people use to decorate reptile tanks. He recommended bleaching or boiling sticks to kill any mites they might contain. Mite-killing chemicals are also available at pet stores, he said.

Finally, Benz said, it is important for reptiles to have a rough surface to rub against so they can shed their skin easily.

Larry Birkholz, salesman at Pets 'n' Stuff in Manhattan, said many people have problems with fish.

"A lot of the time, people don't understand the cycle, or they'll put too many fish in the tank at one time," he said.

Carpenter said ferrets are probably some of the easier exotic pets to care for.

"They've been bred in captivity for thousands of years," he said. "Basically, you just treat them like a cat and vaccinate them like a dog."

He stressed that ferrets are not problem-free, however.

"Females should either be bred or spayed," he said. Otherwise, they could stay in heat for several months, leading to hormone imbalances and eventually to anemia.

Carpenter said with any exotic animal it is important to watch for signs of disease. He said wild animals do not show signs of disease as early as domestic pets because if they did, they would be killed quickly in the wild.

Pet owners should watch for loss of appetite and decreased activity as signs of illness, Carpenter said.

In general, Carpenter said students should "do their homework" and learn what their pets' needs are.

Birkholz said Pets 'n' Stuff sells books about the animals they carry and can order literature on just about every kind of pet.

Carpenter recommended that exotic pet owners talk to a veterinarian about their pet and visit the library to learn more.

"People should make sure animals have the right facilities, the right temperament and the right diet," he said. "They should also make sure they're safe around the family and other pets."

Bowl to your heart's content

WE SUGGEST

We suggest you tie on some nifty bowling shoes and bowl the Big Brothers/Big Sisters Bowling Classic.

Spend a bit of time this weekend helping those who help our future.

One of the most worthwhile organizations in Manhattan, Big Brothers/Big Sisters, has its 11th-annual Bowling Classic this Saturday and Sunday. This year, hopes are high.

The organization receives roughly half of all its funding through fundraising, and this is its biggest event of the year.

The purpose of the group, which receives the other 50 percent of its funding from the United Way, is to help kids from the ages of 6 to 17 who are from one-parent families. Volunteers spend time with the children, giving them a stable environment in which to grow and learn.

The Bowling Classic will be from 12 to 5 p.m. Saturday in the K-State Union bowling alley and from 1 to 5:30 p.m. Sunday at Wildcat Lanes. Fundraisers will also be all next week for league bowlers at Wildcat Lanes.

The fundraiser itself involves pledges of either 5 cents per bowling pin or a flat $5 donation. Pledges are collected by the bowlers, and Big Brothers/Big Sisters will bill the donor at a later time.

So, you only have time to pay, but not time to play. Then grab a donor card today — they can be picked up at either the Union bowling alley, Wildcat Lanes, or by calling Big Brothers/Big Sisters at 776-9575.

A good time and a great cause.

Out with the FAT (and some meat)

Does anybody out there read USA Today? I've always regarded it as a comic book for semi-literate adults. Well, whether you like it or not, Farrell Library is axing USA Today ($97.50/year) and $350,000 worth of other periodicals. Not that this is a surprise. For the past few months, Farrell has been asking the faculty which journals they cannot Owner ($78), Kiplinger's Personal Finance Magazine ($33.40) or that worthless National Business Employment Weekly ($199).

I'm sure the forestry students will be glad that no more trees will be slain to provide them with Forest and Conservation History ($40) or Forestry Chronicle ($90.31). Students in Human Ecology or Agricultural Science will undoubtedly never again need to refer to Food Science and Technology ($215.05), Food Management ($35) or the FAO Forestry Paper ($12).

Obviously, since Farrell has that massively complete collection of information in its user-friendly LYNX system, who needs white elephants in reference like the Guide to Microforms in Print (author, title, subject and supplement volumes, more than $600)?

Nor are the hard sciences being overlooked, with such cheapies as Acta Mechanica ($1,046), Applied Physics: A, Solids and Surfaces ($1,554.53), Biochemica et biophysica acta ($5,400.72), Immunology Letters (1,020.27), and the Methoden der organischen Chemie ($4687.94) being sacrificed for the greater good.

Thank God that overpriced Civil Liberties ($20) rag is being thrown overboard too!

I guess John Hart and Brad Seaborn will have to duke it out over the Journal of Human Evolution ($365) and Religion and Society ($30).

Personally, I'll miss Prostate ($376) and Inflammation ($255), but I think I can live without the Journal of American Mosquito Control ($85).

This is only a partial list, but I can inform you that People, Time and Newsweek all made the final cut. Phew!

If any of you out there finds this list of cuts a tad bit distressing, then I recommend you contact your favorite faculty member for a complete list. Then you can express your opinion to Nelda Elder in the Farrell Collection Development Department, by phone at 532-7436, or by Bitmail at nelder@ksuvm. It's up to you to let them know what you think because they won't ask you first.

Last Monday, they came up with the list of periodicals to be given the whackety-whack. Among the titles deemed expendable: the Chicago Tribune ($266.25), the Los Angeles Times ($208), the Denver Post ($167), the St. Louis Post-Dispatch ($105) and the Manchester Guardian Weekly ($93.50). Fortunately, they spared that paragon of journalistic excellence and information, the Kansas City Star.

The Farrell Powers-That-Be also decided that Pravda ($106) and Izvestia ($97), Russia's only daily, native-language newspapers were no longer important enough to hold on to. Students in international relations, political science and history obviously have no more use for the Adelphi Papers ($120), Arms Control Today ($50), Defense Analysis ($142.50), International Defense Review ($164.71), the International Atomic Energy Agency Yearbook ($65), Journal of Political Science ($12.95), Military History (about $30), USSR Facts and Figures Annual ($148) or War and Society ($18.21).

Business-school students obviously will no longer be needing the information contained in Business and Finance ($198.32), Business

Good intentions gone awry

TOM LISTER

It's a no-win situation.

In Thursday's Collegian, a story ran that dealt with racism. Little did we know the story would be deemed racist itself.

Steven Rock, Collegian sports editor, wrote a story about how two K-State football players were allegedly victims of racist police brutality during an on-campus party.

According to the story, a fight had ensued at a party on campus. Barrett Brooks, a football player, said police used excessive force in trying to break up the fight. And, according to Brooks, the use of excessive force was racially motivated.

Steve wrote about the fight and the alleged police brutality that took place. What Steve hoped to do, I think, was to uncover racism on campus. What Steve ended up doing, though, was being called a racist himself.

The mistake that Steve made was to identify the fraternity involved in the incident as black. The reason he did this was to illustrate that the police brutality was racially motivated.

Two black students who came to Collegian offices Thursday morning couldn't understand that. They were too busy telling Steve he was racist.

Steve was called racist because he identified the alleged victims of a racial incident as black.

He was persecuted for identifying the race of an alleged victim of racism.

It doesn't make sense to me. All the same, though, I can't really be surprised by the whole thing.

As a staff writer for the Collegian, I've interviewed as many blacks as I have whites. Maybe more.

During those interviews, I've had the opportunity to talk to a lot of folks who gave me great insight. Without the title of reporter, I wouldn't have had the excuse to pester them for their views.

And I also interviewed a few blacks who, without a doubt, didn't care too much for whiteness. I didn't let it get to me. The bad comes with the good.

The worst part about writing about anything that concerns race, though, is walking on eggshells every time we hit the keyboard. The worst part is trying to stay out of the firing line of hair-trigger accusations of racism.

Steve got hit. He wasn't careful enough. That was easy enough to see from the two angry guys who came in to label him "racist."

It's a shame to see Steve get labeled. He's not a bad guy. He meant to do good.

I'm tired of hearing cry-wolf accusations of racism. These accusations are racist themselves. As reporters, we shouldn't be berated for trying to objectively portray the news.

In an attempt to enlighten readers to racism, Steve was called racist himself.

Someone help me understand.

It got to a point that the administration was so intimidated of impending action from the BSU that I, a white man, was told that I would not be able to DJ during Jam the Box because, I was told, the BSU would probably not agree to a non-African American hosting the show.

Here's a thought. Let's disband the BSU, the Lutheran Campus Ministry, etc. and just have one big student union and work together to make the world better.

Funny things are going on over at Marlatt Hall

Editor,

I have been living in a residence hall for three years, and I am currently an executive on my Hall Governing Board. I have been keeping up on the articles about Marlatt Hall's "Yakfest," and I would like to comment on three things.

First, when I first moved into the residence hall, I was told staff members are there to support the residents and help them be away from home and deal with life in college. From a reliable source, I know that two staff members planned this "Yakfest." Is that the way you help your residents grow?

Second, the so-called special-ordered kegs were special-ordered all right — before they got the approval from the ARH Board. Aren't they lucky that the exception to the alcohol policy passed?

Third, this one is for the HGB of Marlatt Hall — aren't you lucky that nothing happened

Group bullies by using threats of discrimination

Editor,

My letter in response to Barrett Brooks' allegations of police brutality. He claimed that the Riley County Police Department officers were intimidated. He also stated they would not have done what they did if it was a white fraternity.

Well, as a party DJ, I have been to many a frat party in my time and have seen more brawls than I care to count. I have also seen plenty of arrests. So, believe me, Mr. Brooks, your actions most probably led to your arrest, not the fact that you are in a black fraternity.

The next question brought up by Barrett was why he and Keith Porter should be reported in the paper. Why? Because you have a small amount of celebrity around here. You are probably more well-known on this campus than the University provost.

Looking at the big picture, the main problem with this and many other situations involving African Americans on this campus is that if something doesn't go their way, the Black Student Union cries foul.

Barrett Brooks claimed the RCPD officers were intimidated because he was black. Why wouldn't they be? The BSU and the African American greek organizations intimidate just about everyone on campus with the threat of discrimination.

As a DJ at KSDB, I watched the station administration essentially get forced to play more "ethnic" music by the BSU. KSDB

Athletes must put up with recognition, good and bad

Editor,

First, I would like to apologize to the men of Omega Psi Phi. My letter was based solely on the article in the Topeka Capital Journal. I regret the inaccuracy.

Football players are not ordinary people. Quite the contrary, through the athletic programs, many opportunities arise. Opportunities for scholarships, travel abroad — and I'm sure there are more — that the average student like myself will never obtain.

The price society makes you pay for these opportunities is that you are in the spotlight. Yes, unfortunately, you represent K-State athletics even when you are not on the playing field.

I would like to thank Brooks for giving us his view of the situation. I only feel that if he and the Collegian would have collaborated on a story earlier, many of the inaccuracies would not have occurred. I in no way meant to wreck Brooks' football career with ignorance. However, I am not responsible for his actions.

Finally, I had hoped to stimulate some of the Collegian staff to go dig for stories instead of placing half-page pictures on the front page.

Las Vegas Review-Journal on aid to Bosnia (March 7):

The Clinton administration's very first foreign policy initiative is rapidly deteriorating into a gruesome fiasco. ... (As) Serb troops were pounding the hell out of shrinking Muslim enclaves in Bosnia, the Clinton administration was still defending its airdrops of food and medicine into the area. Problem was, the Serbs were swiping the supplies or using them as bait to lure Muslims into the open where they could be more easily butchered.

The commander-in-chief needs some solid advice from people knowledgeable about the realities of warfare. He won't get such advice from Secretary of State Warren "Mr. Negotiations" Christopher, whose faith in diplomacy as opposed to action is unshakable and who helped keep America mired in the Iran hostage crisis for 444 days.

The Clinton administration has been one fiasco after another, with the Bosnian situation right at the top of the list. Now Clinton mumbles about tightening embargoes, more airdrops and better security for the U.N. "forces" bogged down in the Bosnian muck. Ask South Africa or Cuba about the impact of economic embargoes.

Embargoes, like airdrops of food, are mostly symbolic. Clinton must stand face to face with the horrible reality of Bosnia. His choices are clear: Wade hip-deep into the Bosnian quagmire and prepare to suffer. Or just stay clear and watch the rest of the holocaust unfold. But amazingly, by opting for political appearance over military reality, Clinton has managed to find a course of action that's actually worse than doing nothing.

But no longer.

After figuring out that this practice doesn't really make Baylor art students appealing to many graduate programs (although a majority of the Baylor art faculty have garnered several of the prestigious Dillons Food Store "Color Our Easter Bunny" contest awards) the university decided to cave in.

Why, you ask?

Well, this guy is just so damn classy.

Last week, Schadler heard the case of model Vera Cox, who was given a $238 speeding ticket. Cox argued that she was speeding because she was being chased by "four scruffy guys."

After hearing all the testimony, Schadler dismissed the charges, saying that he believed Cox was telling the truth because of her good looks, and that he probably wouldn't have believed her if she were "fat and ugly" or "an ugly broad."

He then gave her a ride to her former employer's home, bought her dinner and paid for her hotel room.

In 1990, Schadler released without bail a 19-year-old woman charged with forgery, saying it would be a shame to see such a "pretty" woman in jail.

The bank says, "Incredibly sorry, old chum, but we can't comply until we verify your account. They take a while, these things."

Meanwhile, outside, the French taxi driver is getting all snitty, angry that his fare isn't going to be immediately handed over. So he drives Hodson to the police station and threatens to press charges.

By this time, Hodson is going nuts. He returns to the hotel where he announces he wants to buy it so he can fire the manager.

Just to put an exclamation mark on that, Hodson hopped in his car and drove it through the front door of the hotel's restaurant. The only injury occurred to one diner, who was so surprised that the wine he was drinking came out of his nose, causing a slight burning sensation.

Whatever the pattern, baldness can be a hairy topic

Tight hats don't cause it, and odd diets can't prevent it.

Male-pattern baldness is hereditary. Eating certain foods or massaging the scalp with mysterious oils to circulate the blood won't prevent it, and hats do not cut off the blood circulation and cause hair loss, Dr. Robert Cathey, Manhattan dermatologist, said.

These are all myths, along with the idea that if your mother's father is bald then you will be bald too.

Male-pattern baldness accounts for more than 90 percent of permanent hair loss in men. It occurs in more than 40 percent of men between the ages of 18 and 39, according to the book, "The Look You Like" by Linda Schoen and Paul Lazar.

Women also experience hair loss.

Childbirth, certain medications, birth control pills and iron deficiency are a few other potential causes of hair loss, however the hair usually grows back in these cases.

Cathey said he sees a patient concerned about hair loss every other day, and how they answer the questions he asks are a prediction of how bald they will go.

"I usually tell people to look at the males in their family and take an average of how bald they are, and that is how they are likely to turn out," he said.

What is a guy to do once he realizes he is going bald?

Rogaine, hair transplant surgery or a hairpiece are options. However, Cathey warns to beware of the overnight miracle cures.

"Most hair loss remedies are designed to take your money," he said.

Kirk Sarkisian, patient services director at the Elliot-Thomas Medical Group, a hair restoration company, said he agrees with Cathey.

"Hair loss is a touchy situation for men, and that makes them very susceptible to scam artists.

I know people who have spent over $6,000 on pseudo remedies," Sarkisian said.

Some pseudo remedies go beyond the useless topical products. Sarkisian said he had a client that had a hair piece sutured into his scalp. Not only did this look artificial, but it also infected the scalp.

The quest for a full head of hair began long before our time. The history of remedies can be traced back as far as 1550 B.C.

According to the article "Kiss it Goodbye" in the

WHEN THERE'S NO HAIR TO GO

Aug. 1992 issue of Gentlemen's Quarterly magazine, the Ebers Papyrus records report that an Egyptian treatment guru recommended a strange mixture for the curing of baldness. It was composed of the fats of the ibex, crocodile, lion, serpent, goose and hippopotamus, with burned hedgehog bristles immersed in oil, some fingernail scrapings and a potpourri of honey, alabaster and red-ocher applied to the head while chanting certain incantations.

In today's search for hair, the only solution that has been approved by the Food and Drug Administration and proven to actually grow hair is Rogaine.

Rogaine is a topically-applied prescription drug with the active ingredient minoxidil.

Rogaine was originally used to treat high blood pressure. When someone noticed users were "growing hair like monkeys" they decided to see what it would do when rubbed on bald spots.

Upjohn, manufacturer of Rogaine, reports that about 37 percent of its users have some degree of success at growing hair.

They don't know why it works, but it does, Cathey said.

Rogaine costs $50 a bottle and a bottle lasts about four to six weeks. Rogaine must be used twice daily, and if the user stops using it all the hair grown will fall back out.

"There is no guarantee that it will work. Like all prescription drugs it works differently for different people," Cathey said.

He explained that most men who are bald still have fine wispy hair called velluse hair. Rogaine works by turning the velluse hair into terminal, or normal, hair.

The original transition from terminal to velluse hair is a long process.

Promotional material for Rogaine states that hair grows in cycles. It is a fiber made of keratin that is attached at the roots to a bulb called the capillary follicle. In the first stage, hair grows at a rate of about one-half inch per month. This stage lasts two to five years, and the second stage is the transition stage that lasts for one to two weeks.

The final stage is the state of rest, which is when the hair quits growing and either comes out in your hairbrush or is finally pushed out by the next hair ready to start its cycle. When genetic hair loss occurs, the new hair keeps getting smaller and finer until it is velluse hair.

Even when using Rogaine, the transition from velluse hair back to terminal hair can be slow. Users usually need a four-to-six-month trial period to see if Rogaine will work for them.

If Rogaine does not work or you want a more guaranteed solution, you might look into hair transplant surgery.

According to Sarkisian this procedure involves taking hair from a donor area, in the back or on the

It's obvious from all of Whitney Houston's top 10 records that she is a talented singer.

However, from the looks of "The Bodyguard," she might just as well forget acting and stick to the musical lime light.

Houston plays Rachel Marron, a character that is similar to her real-life position — a successful pop singer. But this connection doesn't really help her convey anything about her character's feelings.

Her lack of substantial acting seems amplified considering her co-star is Kevin Costner, a more experienced actor.

That's not to say that Costner is this movie's savior, however.

Even he seems a little restrained and bored as Frank Farmer, the bodyguard who is hired to protect the Houston's character from an obsessed fan.

As for Houston's acting, she tries to look angry when Farmer shakes up her life by tearing apart her elaborate house to improve security. But she really doesn't convey the power through her acting she does when she sings.

The flimsy script doesn't help them either.

Farmer's and Marron's actions aren't explained well, and there are gaps in the characters' motivations. We're not sure why Farmer and Marron fall in love, even though Farmer has always sworn not to get involved with his clients. There's never enough interaction for him to have a good enough reason to fall for Rachel.

Also, it's hard to understand why one minute Marron wants Farmer to leave and the next she wants him to stay. There's no solid transition that explains her actions.

But faithful Houston and Costner fans will probably look past these problems and hang on to see who is trying to kill Marron. They will also enjoy seeing the chemistry that the two manage to develop despite the script and acting.

At least Houston doesn't disappoint with the songs from the movie's soundtrack. Her remake of Dolly Parton's "I Will Always Love You" has hit No. 1 on the pop charts and will echo in your ears long after you've leave the theater. The rest of the soundtrack lives up to Houston's past hits and further establishes her as an outstanding singer.

This movie was definitely just a star vehicle to promote Houston's songs and if anything else, that's all this movie does.

K-State needs win to secure NCAA bid

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

Still in search of another win that will lock up an NCAA tournament berth, the Wildcats will get their last chance today at Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo.

Fifth-seeded K-State will tip off the first round of the Big Eight tournament at 12:10 p.m. against the fourth-seeded Nebraska Cornhuskers.

After starting the season 15-4, the Wildcats have hit a dry patch that has them in danger of not making the cut.

K-State has gone 2-5 in the second half of the Big Eight schedule, and those losses have been by an average of 16 points.

That second-half record, coupled with the team's weak non-conference schedule, has left an NCAA bid questionable.

"I think offensively we're executing some things better than we did in January when we were winning some games," Coach Dana Altman said.

"Defensively, maybe other teams are executing better against us. I just don't feel like we're up quite as much as we were earlier. And I'm sure some of that has been the progression of other ball clubs offensively."

In contrast to K-State's troubles, Nebraska comes into the Big Eight tournament having won four of its last five.

In their Feb. 13 meeting in Manhattan, the Huskers started to find the rhythm that has virtually locked up their third straight trip to the NCAA tournament.

Nebraska came in as the conference's worst shooting team. They left with a 21-point win after hitting 52 percent from the field.

"They were throwing the ball wherever they wanted to," guard Anthony Beane said after the game.

Altman said. "We've got to rebound — we've been outrebounded by Nebraska both times."

In their last meeting, K-State's poor shooting ignited much of Nebraska's transition offense.

The Huskers' zone defense stymied the Cats, who hit only 19 of their 71 field-goal attempts, including two of 23 three-point attempts.

"We've got to hit some of those shots," Altman said. "I'm sure they'll zone us and make us prove that we can hit the jumper."

While K-State hopes that a 7-7 conference record is already enough to qualify for the NCAAAs, Nebraska coach Danny Nee said the Cats should make their tournament plans.

"There's a lot of speculation going around that K-State has to win this game to get into the tournament," Nee said. "But I don't think that's true."

"I think six teams will qualify for the tournament, and right now, we're all playing for seeds."

But if the Cats come home Sunday without an NCAA tournament bid, would they accept a bid to the less prestigious National Invitational Tournament?

"Oh, heck yeah," Altman said. "I like these guys. I want this team to play as long as it can."

"Our plans are to go to the Big Eight tournament and play as well as we can. It's been an awfully long time since K-State has won in the Big Eight tournament. That's our goal."

Let the countdown begin

For 64 lucky teams, it's almost time to get reservations to the Dance.

The seedings for the NCAA tournament bracket will be announced at 5:30 p.m. Sunday on the NCAA Selection Show.

Thirty of the 64 bids are allotted to the winners of the major conference championship tournaments — or in the case of the Big Ten and Pacific Ten conferences, to the regular-season champions.

The other 30 "at large" bids will then be decided by the NCAA selection committee at the Hyatt Regency Crown Center hotel in Kansas City, Mo., following the conclusion of Sunday's games.

Consideration for the "at-large" berth is based on a mix of criteria including the school's win/loss record, strength of schedule and whether the team had a strong finish to the season.

The selection show will be carried on all CBS affiliates, including WIBW-TV in Topeka.

"Usually, that isn't something other teams do to us."

Indeed, K-State's defense and rebounding have been the barometer of the Wildcats' success all year.

The Cats are 15-1 when holding opponents under 70 points and 2-8 when opponents score more than 70. K-State is 15-5 when outrebounding opponents.

"We can't let them get the score in the 80s like we let them here,"

AP picks Beane as league's top newcomer

Wildcat point guard beats OSU's Thompson

STEVEN ROCK

K-State's high-energy point guard Anthony Beane made it a clean sweep of the newcomer of the year awards, nabbing the Associated Press nod Thursday to go with the honor granted by the Big Eight coaches he received Wednesday.

Beane, who finished with nine votes, edged out Oklahoma State's Brooks Thompson, who had seven.

"There's probably not anyone who means more to his team than Anthony has to us this year," Wildcat coach Dana Altman said. "You take him off our team, and I think we could survive — but we would struggle without him."

Beane, after helping Three Rivers Junior College of Poplar Bluff, Mo., win the national title, transferred to K-State and energized the entire team. As point guard, he gave Wildcat fans some of the most exciting endings they ever knew while averaging 10.1 points, 4.7 assists and 1.4 steals.

His forte is last-minute heroism. At Cal-Santa Barbara, he sank a 19-footer with nine seconds left for a 60-59 win. At Oklahoma State, he put the game in overtime with a 24-footer at the buzzer. At Nebraska, he hit two free throws with 1:12 left to give the Wildcats a three-point lead.

At home against Iowa State, he hit a 10-footer at the buzzer to win in overtime. His two free throws against Oklahoma with 3.6 seconds remaining propelled the Cats into their first AP poll appearance in three years.

"I haven't had the opportunity to be around too many guys like that," Altman said. "Mitch Richmond and Steve Henson both made some awfully big plays for us, but probably not as many as Anthony has made in such a short period of time."

And Beane's importance on the court has been recognized by other coaches as well.

"If you have a really good point guard, you're in business," Sooners coach Billy Tubbs said. "And he's a good one."

"The guy who's made the most difference of any guy in this league?" Colorado coach Joe Harrington said. "I don't think there's any question about it — Beane."

Beane is in Kansas City preparing for the Big Eight tournament and could not be reached for comment.

'Big Country' named Big 8 player of year

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Bryant Reeves of Oklahoma State, who led the league in scoring, rebounding and rapid ascent to stardom, was a near-unanimous selection for the Associated Press Big Eight player of the year.

As announced Thursday, 16 media representatives from around the Big Eight region made the 7-foot sophomore a 15-1 choice. Rex Walters, the 6-4 senior who led Kansas to its third straight Big Eight title, received one vote.

As skillfully as Sutton coached, however, he is the first to acknowledge that without Reeves, the Cowboys would have been another average team.

"He deserves to be player of the year," Sutton said. "There were other strong candidates. But no player meant as much to his club as Bryant. If you took Rex Walters off the Kansas squad, they would still be very good."

"But if you take Bryant off our team, we're pretty mediocre. He had a remarkable season. I marvel at the progress he's made in such a short amount of time."

As a youngster in a tiny community in the rugged hill country along the Oklahoma-Arkansas border, Reeves was so raw and unpolished most college recruiters ignored him.

Sutton didn't make that mistake. He did err, however, in his assessment of how quickly his wide-eyed, crewcut man-child would develop. He thought it would take years. But by the time the Cowboys began Big Eight play, Sutton knew what everybody else in the Big Eight was about to find out.

"I saw what he was doing against Big Eight-caliber players," Sutton said. "All of a sudden I thought, 'Hey, this guy is becoming an outstanding offensive player.'"

Although he's a powerful 275 pounds, the still-learning Reeves has a deft, almost delicate touch around the basket. He had almost 20 points and 11 rebounds every game as the Cowboys finished No. 21 in the last regular-season poll and compiled a record of 19-7 overall and 8-6 in the conference, good for No. 2 seed in the Big Eight tournament.

Known as "Big Country" because of his Paul Bunyon physique and the tiny rural town he hails from, Reeves may be the most talented player to come into the Big Eight since Danny Manning enrolled at Kansas and put the Jayhawks on the road to the championship.

In other voting, Nebraska's Erick Strickland was voted the Big Eight freshman of the year.

Baseball Cats head to St. Louis

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Suffering from two consecutive losses to Wichita State this week, the K-State baseball team travels to St. Louis for the first of two back-to-back tournaments.

Coach Mike Clark said he hopes the games in St. Louis stimulate his ballclub.

"It's a great opportunity to play three games in which we can build on for the season," Clark said of the 3-5 Cats.

K-State will face the Southwest Missouri State Bears today and the St. Louis Bilikens and the Dayton Flyers Saturday.

"Southwest Missouri State and St. Louis are very competitive teams," Clark said. "Southwest has a quality program, and St. Louis just went to North Carolina and played very competitively against folks like Wake Forest, North Carolina and Duke.

"Dayton is a club in transition," he said. "Their coach quit a couple of weeks ago. I don't know anything about them."

The Bears went 31-23 last season and finished fourth in the Missouri Valley conference.

The host team, the Bilikens, suffered through a 22-28 season in 1992. The Flyers finished with a 25-31 record last year.

Clark said he would start pitcher David Leonhart (0-0) against the Bears. On Saturday, the Cats will send Scott Dreiling (0-1) to the mound against St. Louis, and Pat Ralston (0-1) would pitch against Dayton in the final game.

After the St. Louis tournament, K-State will travel to play in a second tournament in Fresno, Calif., that runs March 14-20.

Clark said during the first eight games of the Cats' season there have been few players playing well.

"We've still got a lot of question marks," he said. "(Brian) Culp and (Brian) Morrow are doing quality jobs in the middle of the lineup. Tim Decker has done a nice job, and Chris Hess has stepped up as a freshman.

"Other than that, there isn't really anybody stepping up," he said. "We are continuing to platoon at third base and make changes in the outfield. We've had 28 kids start in the first eight games.

"At least everybody's getting their time."

Clark said the team is beginning to improve, mostly because of its non-conference schedule — one of the toughest in the nation.

"The competition is showing us our mistakes," he said. "This should help us find the right combination of kids once we enter Big Eight contests."

Morrow said the Cats are starting to come together.

"We are doing a lot things right, but we can't shut someone down," said Morrow, a transfer from Wichita State.

"I think once we bury someone, we'll be better off.

"Once a team makes a mistake, we've got to capitalize on it.

"We don't know much about the teams, but we are going there to win them," he said.

Five Wildcats to compete in NCAA track

COLLEGIAN STAFF

Five Wildcat athletes will represent K-State this weekend at the NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships in Indianapolis, Ind.

The men's squad will be led by high jumpers Itai Margalit and Percell Gaskins. Margalit owns the country's best indoor jump this season — 7 feet, 5 inches. He broke the K-State high jump record in four consecutive meets.

Gaskins, whose best jump of the season is 7'3", cleared the 7'2-1/2" barrier to become the Big Eight indoor champions two weeks ago in Ames, Iowa.

Margalit continues to battle pain from an ankle injury suffered one week prior to the conference meet. As a result, the sophomore has missed practice this week.

"This is a difficult situation with many uncertainties," interim head coach Cliff Rovelto said. "But if anyone can handle it, Itai can because of his maturity and background of experience in big meets."

Thomas Randolph will compete in the 55-meter dash at nationals for the second consecutive year. Randolph earned all-American honors with an eighth-place finish in the 55-meter dash a year ago.

"Thomas is really running well and always competes well in big meets," Rovelto said. "If he duplicates his performance at the Big Eight meet, he has a good chance to be in the hunt."

Francis O'Neill rounds out the men's squad as a qualifier in the mile run. His time of 4:03.87 provisionally qualified him for the field of 16.

"All of these athletes are capable of scoring," Rovelto said. "With the men, a top-20 team finish is definitely possible, and a top-10 finish is not out of the question."

Gwen Wentland will be the lone female competitor for the Wildcats. This will be her third trip to the national indoor meet. She has cleared 6'2-1/4" in the high jump, also the top indoor mark this season.

"Gwen has jumped consistently this season," Rovelto said. "I feel she is ready to go. For her, it's just a matter of relaxing and letting it happen."

Randolph and O'Neill will compete in preliminary rounds Friday, with the 55-meter dash preliminaries scheduled for 12:45 p.m. and the mile at 4:20 p.m. The men's high jump is also on Friday, at 6:40 p.m. Wentland is scheduled to high jump at 6:30 p.m. Saturday. Finals for the men's mile (7:25 p.m.) and the 55-meter dash (8:05 p.m.) are scheduled for Saturday night.

Going down smiling

NCAA 64-team field may leave out worthy teams

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The NCAA, before announcing the 64-team field for its national basketball tournament, will make sure some of the best 64 teams stay home.

Hit the road, K-State. Take a hike, Tulane. Make way for Penn, Coppin State and the 13-16 Pirates of East Carolina. Make way for teams whose bids are sometimes based not on ability but on birthright.

"The first charge of this committee is to select the 34 best teams," Tom Butters, selection committee chairman, said.

There is no worry the bracket Butters' committee unveils at 5:30 p.m. Sunday will snub the elite — the Dukes, Kentucky and North Carolinas will be accounted for.

But, with all due respect, so will the East Carolinas and the Coppin States.

It's a 64-team tournament. Why not the best 64 teams?

"When I was a young man, I used to argue and discuss this," Butters said. "But I think I was wrong then."

Every year on "Selection Sunday," coaches of many teams that worked hard and played pretty well must give disheartened youngsters the bad news. The NCAA bid that was their goal all year has gone to a collection of lesser athletes.

K-State and Tulane, ranked among the top 60-70 Division I programs in most power rankings, are just two of many "bubble teams" that went into weekend tournaments in danger.

Under the rules, the committee has 34 at-large bids to pass out as it sees fit. The other slots go automatically to the champions of 30 conferences, without regard to how skillful their members are.

Coppin State, ranked No. 131 in this week's Sagarin Ratings, beat Delaware state 80-53 to capture the Mid-Eastern's automatic berth. K-State beat that same Coppin State team 85-61.

East Carolina upset top-seeded James Madison in the Colonial Athletic Association title game this week and became the eighth team in history to drag a losing record into the NCAA field.

It's all a part of policy and tradition, said NCAA officials, that dates back to the tournament's humble beginnings in the 1940s when Walter Byers sold the radio rights out of his hip pocket. It creates excitement in places where the sport has never flourished, they said.

"The Cinderella element, the possibility every year that a team can come out of nowhere and win, is one of the tournament's greatest charms," Tom Jernstedt, deputy executive officer of the NCAA, said. "Nobody will ever forget a North Carolina State team just 10 years ago that wouldn't have had a chance for an at-large bid if it hadn't won the ACC automatic entry and then went on to win the championship."

Although he is in danger of being victimized by it, K-State coach Dana Altman defends the policy.

"Those conferences have a right to be in the tournament," he said. "I think the format is pretty solid. There's going to be some disappointed teams. There always are."

SPORTS DIGEST

► 1-6 NETTERS BACK ON ROAD

After two weeks off since its 8-1 loss to Brigham Young, the K-State tennis team will hit the road again this weekend for tournament play. The team will play in the six-team Rice University Tournament Saturday and Sunday in Houston.

The 1-6 Wildcats are currently led by senior Suzanne Sim, who has posted a 5-2 record in match play this season.

The Wildcats' first opponent will be Northeast Louisiana. Other teams scheduled to play in the tournament are Michigan, Colorado, South Alabama, Tulane and Rice.

The Wildcats will then travel to West Lafayette, Ind., to face Purdue on March 20.

► CAT GOLFERS SHOOT 348

The K-State women's golf team competed in the seventh annual Northern Illinois Snowbird Intercollegiate in Tampa, Fla., on Thursday.

The tournament is taking place on the par-72 Pebble Creek Country Club golf course. Of the 20 teams competing in the tournament, K-State finished 14th with a first-round score of 348.

The Wildcat squad was led by junior Denise Pottle, who shot an 82 for the first 18 holes of this 36-hole tournament. Jacque Wright, a sophomore, fired an 88 in her first round. Both Valerie Hahn, the team's lone senior, and Trisha Hoover, a freshman, shot 89. Debbie Chrystal shot a 90.

This was a disappointing day for K-State coach Mark Elliott's team, who finished with a first-round score of 340 earlier this week in the Peggy Kirk Bell Invitational in Orlando, Fla.

"I'm disappointed. We're not really playing that well," Elliott said. "We're not that far away from playing decent."

A lack of experience has hurt the team this year with only one senior (Hahn) on the squad.

"The talent is there, it's just getting a few games' experience to gain some confidence," Elliott said. "They'll get better. It's early in the season still."

The women's team will finish the tournament today with the final 18 holes.

► MITCHELL, JACKSON HURTING

(AP) — Kevin Mitchell is hurting again.

The 31-year-old outfielder, obtained from the Seattle Mariners to provide home run power for the Cincinnati Reds, may have a fractured foot.

Mitchell was examined Thursday by Dr. Richard Sellers of Tampa's Sports Medicine Clinic and was referred to a foot specialist, who will determine if there is a fracture of the sesamoid bone in the left foot.

The Reds said the injury was not related to a stress fracture of the same foot that caused Mitchell to go on the disabled list Sept. 2 and miss the remainder of the season with the Mariners.

Mitchell played in just one game after reporting to camp, homering in his first time at bat.

Bo Jackson of the Chicago White Sox, trying to make a comeback with an artificial left hip, has two more weeks to prove himself.

Chicago was supposed to tell Jackson by Monday whether it intended to pick up the option on his contract. But Thursday the club said the deadline was extended to March 25.

Jackson has been hobbled by a sore right hamstring. He has not played in the majors since the last month of the 1991 season.

Hair loss remedies not always solutions side of the head, and implanting it in the bald area. While you will see a difference in your hairline, you will also see a big difference in your pocketbook.

Replacing a receding widow's peak costs a minimum of $2,200. If the hair loss is three to four inches back, with no hairline, the costs can soar to $17,000, he said.

New techniques mean bandages are no longer needed after the surgery, and the resulting pain is merely a dull headache. But the procedure does require touch ups.

This procedure is not popular in Manhattan; however, it would be among people with a high disposable income, Cathey said.

The high price has apparently not kept people away. 380,000 to 400,000 transplants were performed last year, Sarkisian said.

If neither option sounds like the solution for you, there is still the option of a hair piece.

Chareline Cain, co-owner of Classic Touch, said good hair pieces start at $300 and go up to an unlimited amount. It all depends on the type of hair used, synthetic or real, and the style and quality of the piece.

Sarkisian advises against hair pieces for men, because he said he believes they usually have too much hair, and they look artificial.

For some who have only a small bald area, disguise might be a viable solution.

Belinda McMillan, owner of Shear Dynamics, has had some clients with small bald spots take markers or temporary hair color crayons and fill in the bald spots. Some also use the method of growing what hair is left extra long, in an attempt to cover up the bald area.

If none of these solutions have appealed to you, there is still one more left. Look to Patrick Stewart, who plays Jon Luc on Star Trek-The Next Generation, for inspiration — save your money, and go bald gracefully.

ARTS

Firm chosen to design museum

Texas-based Moore/Andersson Architects selected from a field of 44 firms to design K-State art museum

RHONDA WILSON
Collegian

An architecture firm was chosen Sunday to design the new art museum for K-State.

Ruth Ann Wefald, chair of the Art Museum Steering Committee, announced Moore/Andersson Architects has been chosen.

The Austin, Texas, firm was selected from 44 other firms, using numerous qualifications.

"One of the things we were looking for was a firm that had experience in designing an art museum," Wefald said.

Moore/Andersson has designed many university and private art museums.

Among the qualifications considered were a firm's ability to listen well and its willingness to work with the University's desires concerning the project, Wefald said.

"One question we asked all the applicants was, 'If we asked you to throw out your design and start from scratch, would you be willing to do that?'" Wefald said.

Moore/Andersson seemed sincere in its willingness to work with the desires of K-State, she said.

The idea for an art museum for the University has been a dream for the campus ever since 1934, Wefald said.

"In a way it's an old idea, since it's been sitting around for quite a while," Wefald said. "But it's also a new idea because we're now moving ahead with it."

Pursuit of an art museum was aided by the KSU Foundation.

One of the goals of the Foundation's Essential Edge Campaign was to raise $5 million for a new art museum.

To date, the project has raised about $4 million. And according to a University news release, Mark Moore, president of the Foundation, said he is confident the remaining $1 million will be raised.

"The art museum is really important to K-State because we have a beautiful art collection but no place for it to be displayed," Wefald said.

She also said the art museum is an important part of education and will enrich the campus in many ways.

One way it will enrich the campus is to allow the University to host traveling art exhibits, Wefald said.

A lot of important art shows can't stop here because the University can't guarantee security of the displays. These types of art need things such as controlled climate and lighting, she said.

Besides bringing outside art shows to campus, Wefald said the museum will be another point of beauty for the campus.

"Moore/Andersson has a reputation for designing buildings that harmonize with their surroundings," she said.

The museum will be located near McCain Auditorium in the southeast corner of campus.

overwhelming against Clinton on the AIDS immigration issue.

With the House vote, 185 Democrats joined all the Republicans in endorsing the ban.

House-Senate negotiators who will study the AIDS ban in conference will have the leeway to find some middle ground that potentially could save face for Clinton. For instance, negotiators could keep the government's ban in place temporarily while the issue is studied.

Supporters of the ban said letting immigrants in who were infected with AIDS would put a strain on the already overburdened U.S. health-care system. They noted it can cost $100,000 a year to care for an AIDS patient.

in the Classroom administrator.

KFAC trains teachers and volunteers to teach students about agriculture and encourages activities such as field trips and intensive agriculture studies during Ag Week.

As the percentage of the population directly involved with farming decreases, Tally said it becomes easier for teachers and students to forget where their food and clothing comes from.

"Agriculture is very important to every person on earth, but most people either don't understand this or take it for granted," Tally said.

"It is for these reasons that a number of Kansans are working together to educate our youth about agriculture."

course, at Heartland Park, Topeka.

With all the time Bill and Lisa spend together in competitive situations, one might think that things between them could get a little tense from time to time, but both said that isn't so.

Lisa said they never fight about things at the race track.

"To be a really good race driver, you have to be as emotionless as you can. You have to concentrate on the car, so really those emotions don't come into play," Lisa said.

Bill echoed her sentiments.

"I don't get mad at her, not even when she blew up three motors in one weekend," Bill said.

Although Lisa has beaten Bill in one race, he said he didn't mind.

"I don't have any problems with it if my car isn't working right. I think it's great," he said.

"I'd like to think that she isn't experienced enough to beat me, all other things being equal."

Lisa admitted she isn't as good as her husband, but said she is gaining on him.

"He's so much better than me. I'm just now getting to where I can stay in the same area of the track as him and see how he can go so much faster than me," she said.

"Every time I race I close the gap on him."

There is never any doubt in Lisa's mind, she said, that she can beat him and she "always has him in her sights."

Bill said the key to his winning ways is being competitive in everything he does and the fact that he thinks he has a feel for cars and the track.

"It's very difficult to be really good at anything, but I've been racing for more than 20 years," Bill said.

"I've always been really competitive and wanted to be good. I wanted to race, and I've stayed with it."

Bill got his first race car as payment for a debt in 1969 and has since turned racing into his life's work.

Noble Enterprises, located in Manhattan, builds new race-car engines from parts. These engines last only four to six hours and then have to be rebuilt.

Bill has customers from coast to coast and has even been known to take engines out of his cars at the track so that he can serve his customers better.

Not only a champion race-car driver, he also shoots outdoor archery and was an alternate to the Olympic trap-shooting team when he was in his twenties.

"Everything I've done has been based on competition. Competition and money motivate me."

Indian community welcomes spring

India Fest '93 draws crowd of about 600 people to share culture, foods

SYLVESTER CHRISTIE
Collegian

At sunset on Saturday, people from all around Manhattan converged at the Manhattan Middle School to celebrate India Fest '93.

To kick off the evening's activities, the crowd was treated to dinner Indian style.

These included: biriyani (fried rice), chole (spiced lentils), samosa (rolls stuffed with vegetables), kheema (spiced ground beef), samba (gravy made with a variety of spices) eaten with the rice, and gulab jamuns (made from cake and milk), used as dessert.

Stephen Coulson, director of the engineering experiment station, said the food was good, as it was not too hot, and tolerable enough for those not used to Indian food.

"Very good food. Everything is great," he said.

Thiagarajan Rajagopalan, graduate student in computer science and president of the Indian Students Organization, said the group has been planning since February for the event.

Most of the people who helped with the planning and actual working did so voluntarily, he said.

India Fest has become an annual event used as a gesture by the Indian community to welcome spring, he said.

It is also an opportunity to share Indian foods and culture with the Manhattan community, he said.

This year's celebration was successful, Rajagopalan said.

The planning committee did not expect such a large turnout, he said.

"We were planning for 500, but this is about 600," he said.

In addition to food and entertainment, there was an exhibition of Indian artifacts and clothing.

Among the exhibits was matka, a jar used in India to transport water for drinking purposes from the river to the house.

Also on exhibit was an elephant made of silk and wood. The elephant was used as a means of transport for the king during early Indian history. Clothing items were ghaghra, a wide skirt worn in desert areas to reduce the effect of heat. Vessels of varying shapes and sizes made of brass were also on display.

To crown the evening, the final event was an extravaganza of Indian songs, dance and instrumental music.

It made no difference that the songs were not done in English — the crowd cheered after each performance just the same.

Special features of the entertainment segment included a dance performed by two children — a four-year-old and a six-year-old. The dance depicted their dream of love and romance when they grow up.

A band recently formed by a group of Indian students electrified the crowd to the point that a group of young men from India danced around the room showing they enjoyed the music.

The event serves to foster friendship among Indian students and expose the Indian culture to other students, Islam Saiful, graduate in animal sciences, said.

The band performed all types of popular Indian songs, so although people were there from different parts of India they could still have a good time.

He said he believed next year's event will be even bigger provided it is properly organized.

"I believe next time will be more than this if it is well organized," he said.

Coulson said this was his first year attending the event, but definitely plans to be back next year.

Smruti Patel, graduate student in mathematics, performs Pushpanjali, a piece in the Bharatnatyam style of classical Indian dance, at India Fest '93 Saturday night at Manhattan Middle School. The evening of Indian food and entertainment was presented by the Indian Students Organization.

Ruthless winter storm claims 107 lives

ASSOCIATED PRESS

The blizzard that paralyzed much of the eastern seaboard whirled through New England and eastern Canada and headed out to sea Sunday.

It left at least 107 dead from Cuba to Quebec and shattered records with as much as 4 feet of snow and 15-foot drifts.

Among the victims was a man found frozen to death in Alabama. Dozens suffered heart attacks while shoveling snow. Three died, four were missing, and three were rescued after a Honduran freighter sank in stormy seas off Florida.

About 100 hikers hunkered down in shelters and tents in the mountains of east Tennessee.

Dozens of others were missing in North Carolina wilderness Sunday night, a full day after the storm passed.

Electricity was out for nearly a million customers up and down the coast. Many didn't have heat either. Thousands more people were stuck in airports and shelters.

The calm after the storm was windy and bitterly cold — as low as a record 2 degrees in Birmingham, Ala., and a wind chill of 40 below zero in Vermont — threatening to freeze crops in the South and slowing the storm cleanup.

"When is it going to stop? Every time I throw a shovel of snow, it blows right back in my face," said Bill Loomis of Stuyvesant Falls, N.Y., 25 miles south of Albany.

Rain followed by cold weather turned to snow on New York City's streets into rock-hard piles of ice, Sanitation Commissioner Emily Lloyd said.

The task, she said, is "not just carrying it away. Now it's chipping and carrying it away."

Airports in Atlanta, Washington, D.C., New York, Boston and other cities slowly began re-opening, but there weren't many flights, and air travel around the country was backed up.

Interstate highways throughout the storm's wide swath were being cleared, though plow crews had to contend with blowing snow. Secondary roads remained impassable in many places.

The American Red Cross had 600 shelters open in 20 states.

At least 18 homes toppled into the sea on New York's Long Island, leaving mattresses, cocktail tables and other debris in the sand. Four houses were close to collapse on Nantucket in Massachusetts. About 200 homes along the North Carolina coast were damaged and may be uninhabitable, the Army Corps of Engineers said.

Roads and homes were flooded, and beaches were scoured along the Gulf Coast and along the Atlantic up through New England, but the damage wasn't as bad as had been feared in the Northeast. By the time high tide came early Sunday, the wind shifted, coming from the west and pushing water away from the coast.

"A miracle came out of nowhere," said Bragdon Hanson, an emergency manager in York County, Maine. The coast had been especially vulnerable because a devastating three-day Nor'easter in December had leveled protective dunes and breached barrier beaches.

"It's a kiss compared to what we were expecting," said Pam St. Jean, a hotel bartender in Hampton Beach on the seacoast in New Hampshire, which got up to 35 inches of snow inland.

Candidates visit dorms

Student voice in housing, rental inspection discussed

WADE SISSON
Collegian

Candidates for student body president and vice president were back on the campaign trail last night.

Presidential candidates Charles Walters and Tracy Mader, along with their respective running mates, Ian Bautista and Marc Scarbrough, discussed their campaign platforms at Moore, Boyd and Van Zile halls.

Because he entered the race last week, presidential candidate Ed Skoog had not been invited to participate in the visits.

Skoog attended the Moore Hall meeting, and will be invited to future discussions.

Walters, junior in history, political science and international studies, began the Moore Hall visit by outlining his ticket's proposal to directly involve student government in the operations of university housing.

"Do you realize that housing is one of the only administrative agencies here with no student voice?" Walters asked.

The plan Walters proposes would include the appointment of a secretary of housing who would meet regularly with presidents of the hall governing boards, the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls, the Jardine Terrace Apartments Mayor's Council and off-campus housing representatives.

Walters said a list of landlords who comply with the Building Officials and Code

Anthrax blamed for 42 deaths in 1979

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A cloud of deadly anthrax spores, probably from a germ warfare accident, floated through a Russian city and killed at least 42 people in 1979, according to a new study of secret autopsies.

The study, to be published Monday in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, said tissues and records hidden by Russian scientists after an anthrax outbreak and now examined by American experts show the 42 victims died after breathing disease particles.

Dr. David H. Walker, a professor of pathology at the University of Texas Medical Branch at Galveston who examined the tissues, said the findings are consistent with some sort of germ warfare accident that sent a lethal cloud floating into a city of 1 million people.

American authorities have said since 1980 an anthrax outbreak in the city of Sverdlovsk, 840 miles east of Moscow, was caused by a military accident, but officials of the former Soviet Union said the outbreak came from infected cattle.

NEWS DIGEST

► LOCAL SOLDIERS RETURN FROM TOUR IN SOMALIA

NEIL ANDERSON
Collegian

Three soldiers deployed from Fort Riley in December have returned from Somalia.

The two detachments the soldiers are with were deployed to help in Operation Restore Hope.

Two of the returning soldiers are members of the 593rd Transportation Detachment and one soldier is a member of the 19th Public Affairs Detachment.

Jeanette Krueger, Fort Riley media relations officer, said the two members of the 593rd worked with the U.S. Army Garrison at the Directorate of Logistics.

They were responsible for assisting with traffic control and making sure vehicles left and arrived at the correct destinations, she said.

The two soldiers of the 593rd returned because it was their time in the rotation, Krueger said.

The 19th Public Affairs Detachment had four soldiers in Somalia, Krueger said.

They were responsible for assisting in civilian media escorts, writing for external media and helping in the joint information bureau, which is for the public information program, Krueger said.

Krueger also said the three remaining soldiers of the 19th are finishing the work started by the original four-member team.

K-State alumni keep graduates in touch

MICHELLE SMITH
Collegian

Graduating students who wish to continue their K-State involvement can join an alumni club in their area.

Amy Renz, vice president of the Alumni Association, said there are numerous clubs in Kansas and nationwide.

"There are over 30 clubs within the state of Kansas and at least 25 out of state," Renz said.

One of the main functions of alumni clubs is to help recruit prospective students through a student/alumni dinner. At these functions, there are speakers from academic and athletic departments on campus. Prospective students are invited and given free K-State T-shirts.

Students and graduates interested in finding out about an alumni club in their area can contact the Alumni Association. The association also sends mailings to graduates in areas where there are official planned events, Renz said.

The Lawrence alumni club is active in recruiting prospective students. Every spring, it sponsors a golf tournament, which is its primary fundraiser. Most of the money raised is contributed to the Mike Ahearn Scholarship Fund.

Some of the money is kept to award scholarships from the club. At a picnic at the end of the tournament, prospective students are awarded the scholarships, said Joe Fike, former president of the Lawrence alumni club.

Fike said their club is more than just an alumni club established for recruiting.

"Most of our functions are centered around athletics. We have watch parties and tailgate parties at K-State games," Fike said.

The Alumni Association helps organize the watch parties. It arranges for a satellite transmission of the game to a local restaurant or bar. Recently, the Alumni Association helped set up more than 20 watch parties for the K-State-KU game, Renz said.

Gary Glatz, president of the Chicago alumni club, said he was pleased with the attendance at their watch party.

"We just recently had a watch party for the K-State-KU game. About 66 people showed up," Glatz said.

Unlike the Lawrence club, which has events every month, the Chicago alumni club usually only has a spring and a fall event.

"We usually have a luncheon in

CUTTING

Working the steer is the name of the sport in

STORY BY JULIE CORBIN ♦ PHOTOS BY DAVID MAYES

Inches from the ground, the horse abruptly changes directions to face the steer. The steer fakes left but changes directions at lightening quickness.

Just as quickly, the horse sizes up the situation and faces the steer once again, blocking its pathway to the herd. The steer breaks back toward the turnback men and almost makes it to the gate before being turned back to face the horse once again.

Working the steer is the name of the sport. And the sport is cutting.

Starting Friday evening, cutters from Kansas, Oklahoma and Nebraska showed up to compete in the horse cutting sponsored by the Horseman's Association in Weber Arena. Throughout the weekend, competitors worked steer after steer, trying to complete the best run of the day.

There were 30 practice runs Friday night and about 90 runs Saturday and Sunday.

"The pay-off is based on the number of entries. A portion of the entry fee is put towards the purse. In addition, some classes have added money put up by the club," Rick Gates, show manager, said.

"We've had a real good couple of days. There were a few rough spots, but we're learning as we go. Everything's come out real well," Gates said. "We've had a real good turnout, especially since it's been years since we've put on a show like this."

Included in the turnout were Jonathan Hayes and Mike Dyal, tight ends for the Kansas City Chiefs. They arrived Friday afternoon to practice and competed both Saturday and Sunday.

Both players started cutting within the past two years.

"I remember sitting around in college and watching. I always knew that if I ever got a little money I'd like to try it, and I finally did," Hayes said.

Interfering with practice does not seem to be a big problem for the players. Going to spring and weekend cuttings works pretty well, Hayes said.

In December, Hayes went to a cutting futurity in Texas.

"If anyone ever had the opportunity to go down and see the futurity, they would want to get into cutting. It is incredible to see — there's 3-year-olds there working. Ah man, it's incredible. The purse is $100,000," Hayes said.

In cutting, there are classes for all ages and ability. Thirteen-year-old T. J. Vance from Inavale, Neb., had the high score of 73 in Sunday's youth class. Vance, who has been cutting since he was 10, practices at home with his dad and older brother, who are also cutters.

"My dad just suggested it, and it sounded like a good thing to do," Vance said.

"It is an equalizer. It just humbles you. But it's exciting," Vance said after his winning run.

The sport is not just for men, either.

Cutters Susan Koger, Willmore, and Terry Williamson, Arkansas City, are two women who compete.

They met at a cutting about three years ago, and although they live three hours away from each other,

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Baseball is in the air

THE ISSUE

It's spring, and there are baseballs being thrown as you read this.

WE SUGGEST

Go see a K-State baseball game.

A new field, new scoreboard, new seats and a new season.

The K-State baseball team began its home schedule last week with new features that will try to appeal to fans and bring a professional atmosphere to Frank Myers Field.

Anyone who attended a game in the past saw an infield with holes and bumps that created problems for both teams. The infield got so bad that Coach Mike Clark threatened to play the rest of the home schedule somewhere other than Frank Myers.

When the tarp was pulled off the field on March 3, there was a green, grassy field with new irrigation and drainage systems underneath. All of the money for the diamond came from private donations — saving the University $20,000.

Another change is a new scoreboard in right field. Along with keeping track of runs, hits and errors, the scoreboard shows what the teams did in each inning and what other Big Eight squads are doing — unlike the electronic relic beside it.

Also, for the first time, all the conference teams will come to Manhattan this season.

Given the fact that with their student ID cards, all K-Staters can watch K-State baseball for free, there is no reason not to enjoy the new atmosphere and changes at Frank Myers Field.

Condoms deconstructed

"They drifted gloomily up and down among...the waxplants 'like dilapidated preservatifs,' the Consul had remarked with a diabolical look."

— Malcom Lowry, "Under the Volcano"

Consider the reenactment of Shiloh, a summer rendezvous of Civil War historians, RV owners and local businessmen who have grown their slain great-grandfathers' beards, and who have been shining their muzzle-loading rifles and cannons for weeks in preparation.

It is a simulacrum. The whole hubbub is a reproduction of someone else's experience. The Shiloh reenactment does not mean Shiloh.

Sex with a condom does not mean sex.

But reenactment is all we do these days.

J.A.K. GLADNEY

If you weren't paying attention, last week was Condom Sense Week. We had half-price AIDS testing at Lafene Health Center and loud videos in the Union Courtyard. Actors in the video were cleverly dressed as condoms, telling us in street jive (the usual speech of condoms) how condoms are the solution to most modern problems, including — but not limited to — abortion, AIDS, venereal disease, unwanted pregnancy and the slump in world zinc prices.

The miscast condom actor (and isn't acting itself like wearing a condom?) did not address himself to real sexual issues. He did not mention stickiness, nor surprised looks — just a little dismayed, disappointed; he did not make any jokes about the battalions of lost friendships, about the end of comfortable conversations brought on by morning light. Instead, the video, and the whole condom week, endorsed the kind of sex sad men rent from the Mini Mart and dream about.

The video actor may as well have said, "Sex is the answer to all your problems. And condoms are the answer to all of sex's problems."

Which is beautiful. Sex is beautiful. Even premarital sex, the pure animal drive of high-school afternoons before the parents came home from work. The back seats, the surprising ends to dates you never thought twice about. But there are, unfortunately, facts.

There are genital ulcer diseases. There is cervicitis. There are things treatable by Ceftriaxone, by Erythromycin, by Tetracycline and Silver Nitrate. There is chlamydia.

And the myth of condom prevention is as false as the belief that robots will bring four-day work weeks.

A study cited in Consumer Reports revealed a failure rate of 50 to 70 percent in preventing all sexually transmitted diseases. There are microscopic channels in the latex of condoms. Some of these are 5 microns across. The HIV virus is 0.1 microns across, a size difference that is "effectively like using chicken wire to keep out mosquitoes," according to a letter to the Wichita Eagle editors on Feb. 27. Sperm is 2.5 microns across.

Condoms only protect part of the issue. There is no plastic sheath for emotion, for bad ideas.

Apology is an art, in that it is artificial. Most languages have no word for "sorry."

An apology is a repetition of the past in which the apologizer acts differently. But the past is already always lost to you.

Language is capable of many things. None of them is magic. Words make poor prophylactics.

In fourth grade, our teachers let us redo a bad math assignment. An accident in the recess four-square game warranted a do-over. Somewhere along the line in becoming post-modern grownups, we lost our ability to do-over, to redo. But don't we have the right? Shouldn't we be allowed to do everything twice?

With a condom, men make love twice. Once in coitus and once in a tidy, plastic world.

J.A.K. Gladney is a freshman in nuclear engineering and cultural studies. Her column is temporarily replacing Ed Skoog's. Skoog's column will return in April.

EVOLUTION EVOLVED

JOHN HAWKS

Today, we should understand that it doesn't really matter what one believes about the origin of life and the universe. For most purposes there is no difference between thinking that the spark came from a fiery explosion or a divine touch. Neither may ever be proven, short of inspiration. The question is academic.

What does matter is how one's ideas of genesis affect the way she or he behaves. There can be no question that a person's world view affects on many levels the reason that outlines his or her behavior.

The world views of the creationist and of the evolutionist are rather different. Each is, of course, valid within its own framework. Each system implies different goals, different ways to live. The world view most suited to life in 20th century America seems to be evolutionism.

To accept evolution, one need only acknowledge that things change. This is a demonstrable fact. People change. Organisms change. Ideas change.

It is a rather small leap from this fact to the biological theory of evolution: that organisms, under the selection of natural processes, over many generations will gradually change into different forms. To support this, we need only to describe mechanisms to allow it to take place — genetics, predation, migration. That this same process resulted in all the forms we see today, including us, is the evolutionist scheme for the rise of life.

Whether all life developed from one self-replicating protein 4 billion years ago is not, in a sense, really important. It can never be proven. It relies on the assumption that things in the past worked much the same as they do today. That may or may not be true.

What is important is the evolutionist world view is useful to us today. For life in our society — at least, for happy life in our society — it is essential to understand that things change. Things can rapidly go from bad to worse if we let them. Likewise, if we work at it, we can put ourselves in a better position.

Evolution spawns the ideal of progress. It allows us to believe that we, without divine intervention, can make the world a better place in which to live. It allows us to believe evil is not inherent in the human position and that the world should not be rejected.

Modern economic systems depend on evolution. The mythology of capitalism — that through hard work one can rise in social position — and of socialism — that people can work together to eliminate social class — both depend on evolutionist thought.

Evolutionism is now the dominant world view of our society, a society based on principles of technological and social progress. In this situation, people too often mistake "scientific" for "authoritative." Evolution is not an authority, but a process.

Evolutionism does not seek to, nor need to destroy the creationist worldview. Creationism has spawned many good ideas, ideas that evolutionism readily embraces. The ideals of hard work found their basis in predestination before progress. The Bible itself lays out some of the basis for evolution.

The creationist world view, however, encourages statism. A refusal to accept evolution is a refusal to accept change. Creation was the dominant theory of genesis in Europe in the Middle Ages, when the dominant economic and political system was feudalism. People were encouraged to respect their social station and not attempt to change it.

The creationist world view may have been well-suited for the problems facing medieval society; however, it is rather unsuited for the problems facing our own. Evolution is accepted today because it helps us to understand things. For us, it works.

Just as forms of organisms can evolve in a circle back to a past state, there may be a time when creationism comes back into favor. But for now, the genetic world view of humans has evolved to evolutionism. To succeed in living well, and understanding our relationship with the world around us, it would be best to understand that.

► RESPONSE

Pieces of evolution can be flatly proven

Editor,

This is a response to the column by John Hart in the March 9 Collegian.

Hart, it is very easy to prove that evolution works on a time scale well within your lifetime — even within a couple of weeks. All you have to do is take a given strain of bacteria and demonstrate that a specific dose of an antibiotic kills all of them. Then you take these bacteria and grow some in a dose of the antibiotic that only kills about 90 percent of them. Do this three or four times and bingo — you've evolved a strain of bacteria that's resistant.

Oh, you think bacteria are too primitive? Try rats. Any pest control operator in New York can tell you rats that used to get wiped out with a small dose of Warfarin are now resistant to it. These are examples of evolution in action.

There is certainly no direct proof that several billion years of evolution would develop people. However, if I can make bacteria resistant to an antibiotic in a couple of weeks, people in a couple of billion years doesn't seem so improbable.

Your comment about willful intellectual deception might apply to your interpretation of the facts surrounding evolution. You seem to be quite willing to ignore facts that don't fit your argument; however, this does not change the fact that evolution works.

Evolution will always be theory, but credible

Editor,

I was perplexed by John Hart's recent column, "Evolution plagued by dogma." I don't disagree with what seems to be his central point, that the biological theory of Darwinian evolution is in fact theoretical in nature. I also agree that there are vast uncertainties and gaping holes in the fossil record. What perplexes me is that Hart seems to think that any reputable paleontologist or biologist in the late 20th century would suggest anything different.

Hart writes that "Modern science, however, treats evolution not as theory but as orthodoxy and 'fact.'" This simply isn't the case. Evolution, like all scientific theories, is perpetually being tested to see if it fits the facts. Scientists continually work to uncover the mechanisms operating in the process of evolution, and paleontologists spend lifetimes compiling the biological heritage of our planet. The truth is that our knowledge of evolution will always be incomplete and will never offer the finality encompassed by the word "fact," if by "fact" one means sterile, unquestionable certainty of all details.

Science does not operate in the realm of absolutism. The comparison that Hart makes between evolutionary theory and the world being round is inadequate. One is a simple observation of a thing, whereas the other is an insight into a complex biological process.

Hart implies that Darwinian evolution is no more scientifically credible than faith in creationism. Untrue. Biologists and geneticists observe evolution daily, on a micrological level.

Evolution is indeed theoretical. It always will be. We may never know the full role of natural selection in the process and will assuredly never eliminate many of the gaps in the fossil record. But the fact is, evolution has been proven to occur and is continually being tested and retested. It fits all the empirical data. Yesterday's and today's.

Flint Hills Job Corps Center — learn it

Editor,

This letter is in response to Ron Lackey's March 9 Collegian article, "Warthogs top Phi Dels for all-University title."

In the article, Brad Sonner was quoted as saying "FHJCC really doesn't stand for anything."

The acronym FHJCC does stand for something — Flint Hills Job Corps Center. It represents a wonderful opportunity for all economically disadvantaged youth of Kansas. I am surprised that no one at the game, at Ballard's or at the Collegian knew this, especially since some of its graduates are attending K-State, including me.

It is ironic that by wearing those shirts representing FHJCC, this team won. Now an unknown Flint Hills Job Corps Center holds the all-University title.

Allow me to inform your readers. FHJCC is a federally funded academic and vocational school for disadvantaged youth. It offers training in a trade suited to one's interest, academic enhancement and much more. I am a graduate of FHJCC and proud, because if I had not attended, I would not be in college at this point.

► RESPONSE

Discrimination will not go unchallenged

Editor,

In an attempt to respond to people like Gary Weed, I don't know where to start.

First — Gary, you were not at the party. You do not know what transpired. Until you know the actual facts, you should be quiet. I was there. So, I am able to comment.

Second — Barrett's actions did not lead to his arrest. As he said — and as I observed — he was merely trying to break up a fight, while, incidentally, the ever-so-helpful police officers took a passive role as spectators. This was not the first, and unfortunately, it will not be the last time an African American male will be arrested under false pretenses.

Third — What the hell do you mean that the main problem with African Americans on this campus is that if something doesn't go their way, the Black Student Union cries foul? BSU had nothing to do with this incident. Check yourself. I commended Barrett for confronting the excessive use of force by the police officers and not sweeping it under the rug. The officers were wrong, and letting them get away with it is also wrong.

Fourth — Being a member of BSU and a member of a predominately black greek organization, I know that I do not intimidate anyone on campus with the threat of discrimination. I have been at K-State for five years and have experienced subtle and blatant racism all over Manhattan. If discrimination is present, I guarantee the situation will not go unheard. That is not a threat — that is reality that must be dealt with. If you feel intimidated by African Americans, then you must believe that you are in the wrong about what you do.

And no, BSU should not and will not be disbanded. There needs to be an outlet to deal with certain aspects of attending a predominately white university and people like you, Gary Weed.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Wildcat lacrosse beats WSU in sudden death

Stu Robson, Wildcat midfielder, wraps his arm around a Wichita State player Sunday afternoon while Brian Frownfelter (2), tries to give him a hand. K-State beat the Shockers, 7-6, in the second sudden-death overtime.

K-State breaks Shocker jinx with 7-6 victory

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

The Wildcat basketball team lost to Wichita State 74-61 on Dec. 21. A month later, the Lady Cats fell to the Shockers, 66-54. Just last week, Wichita State took both games against K-State's baseball team.

But the Shockers don't have anything on the Wildcat lacrosse team.

K-State posted a thrilling, come-from-behind, double-overtime 7-6 win over Wichita State Sunday afternoon at Memorial Stadium.

"I thought it was incredible," K-State coach Curt Thurman said. "I was thrilled with the way we came back."

"In the first half, we weren't playing like a team," he said. "But in the second half, we came together and played as a team." K-State is 2-0 on the year.

The Cats fell behind in the second half after being tied 2-2 at halftime, on the strength of goals by Stu Robson and Tondo Waldron.

In the third quarter, the Shockers scored three goals to jump to a 5-2 lead. Midfielder Rob Hileman's goal made it 5-3, but Wichita State wasn't done, scoring again in the fourth period to extend the lead to 6-3.

But the Cats weren't done either. Attacker Chris Irrig scored two goals in the fourth, tying the score at 6-6. But sandwiched between this two goals was, perhaps, the turning point.

With the Shockers clinging to a 6-4 lead, midfielder Scott Forkenbrock stuck his stick in front of the Wichita State goalie, who was trying to make a pass. The ball caromed off his stick and into the net.

"After Scotty got that goal," defender Jay Sweet said, "the momentum totally shifted toward us."

Irrig's goal tied the game, and the game went into a five-minute sudden death — next goal wins.

But nobody scored in that first extra period, and a second-overtime period began. Just 1:03 into the second sudden death, Irrig scored his third goal of the game, a shot from about 25 feet out that hit nothing but net.

"Not bad for an old man," said Irrig, the oldest man on the team, affectionately known as "Dad."

"I'm 32 years old, and it's a lot of fun playing with all these college kids," he said. "A lot of fun."

Despite the Cats' seven goals, it was defense — not offense — that was the story of the game, Thurman said.

"The defense was just incredible," he said. "The defense won the game today. We just shut them down."

Specifically, K-State shut down John Gorham, the Shockers' leading scorer who had just one goal Sunday.

"They controlled the ball for most of the first half," said defender Doug Stoltz, who was covering Gorham for much of the game. "I was just hanging on for dear life."

Stoltz was working so hard, in fact, that he broke his stick when Gorham was trying to make a shot.

"It just shattered," he said. "I turned around, and I was like, what the hell?"

Baseball Cats post 11-5 weekend win

But last 2 games canceled because of snowy conditions

DEREK NELSON
Collegian

ST. LOUIS — With a weekend snowstorm blowing into St. Louis, the Wildcats were able to play just one game in the St. Louis Billiken Classic. On Friday, the Cats beat Southwest Missouri State, 11-5.

The offense, which had been inconsistent all season, exploded against the Bears.

The Cats pounded out 11 hits, including one home run and three doubles.

Scott McFall led the Wildcats at the plate. He was three-for-five with a double and three runs scored.

Brian Culp and Jamey Stellino also had doubles while Chris Wolf belted a two-run home run. Wolf's first-round tripper of the season got the Wildcats back into the game after trailing 3-0 after the first inning.

"I thought we swung the bats well," Wildcat head coach Mike Clark said. "We could have been more selective early in the game, but we ended up getting a couple of big hits."

Wildcat starter David Leonhart, 1-0, walked three in the first but then settled down and struck out five in picking up his first win of the season. Pat Ralston came in and pitched the final three innings and picked up his first career save.

"Our pitchers have been soft early all year, and then they get into trouble," Clark said. "Then they get more aggressive and pitch well. Pat came right out and took control. He got ahead of batters and set them out and picked up a couple of strikeouts."

Leonhart was quick to agree. "After the first inning, I settled down," he said. "I felt more comfortable and I knew we would score runs. I just tried to keep them from scoring after the first inning."

The Wildcat comeback started with Wolf's home run in the third inning. Then in the fifth, McFall and Stellino led off with back-to-back doubles.

McFall then scored when Bear starter Greg Resz lost his balance and fell off the mound and was called for a balk.

After Resz walked Tim Decker and Wolf, Bear reliever Chris Cradick was greeted with an RBI single by Culp. Todd Petering then drove in Culp to end the scoring in the inning.

The Wildcats added two runs each in the sixth and the eighth to stretch the lead.

The Cats' final two games of the Billiken Classic with Dayton and host St. Louis were canceled because of snow and a minus-16 wind-chill index.

The Wildcats are looking for better weather as they head for the Pepsi/Johanny Quik Classic in Fresno, Calif. K-State will play its first game against the Texas Tech Red Raiders.

SPORTS DIGEST

► NETTERS FALL TO 2-8

The K-State tennis team lost two of its three weekend matches, dropping its overall record to 2-8.

On Friday, the Wildcats beat Northeast Illinois, 6-3. But K-State fell to South Alabama 6-0 in the semifinal round on Saturday and 5-1 to Tulane in the consolation match on Sunday.

► OU ACCEPTS NIT BID

NEW YORK (AP) — The Oklahoma Sooners, left off the NCAA ballot, accepted a berth Sunday night to play in the National Invitation Tournament.

Oklahoma finished the season with a 19-11 mark, but the Sooners were overlooked after Missouri received an automatic bid by winning the Big Eight tournament. Oklahoma will be host to Michigan State, 15-12.

Sooner coach Billy Tubbs was none too pleased with being left out of the 64-team field. His primary complaint was that the tournament champion receive an automatic bid.

Other perennial powers left out of the NCAA field who accepted NIT berths were Georgetown (16-12) and UNLV (21-7).

Gaskins new NCAA champ

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

The K-State indoor track team was represented well at the NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championship in Indianapolis, Ind. this weekend, as four athletes won all-America honors — including an NCAA champion.

The NCAA champion was Percell Gaskins, who captured the high jump title Friday night with a leap of 7 feet, 5 1/4 inches.

Gaskins said it was a great feeling to win. "It was a big accomplishment," said Gaskins, who won the NAIA title last year for Northwest Oklahoma State. "It feels as great as when I won the junior nationals in 10th grade. It wouldn't feel as good if I had broken my personal best."

Gaskins, also a member of the K-State football team, had a personal best of 7'3" inches earlier this season before the meet.

As the bar went higher, Gaskins said he was jumping better.

"I perform better under pressure," he said. "I had four misses, and a guy from Minnesota had none. We went to 7'3" and 7'4". I wanted to win."

The jumper from Minnesota couldn't get over the 7'5" mark.

"I knew I could jump better than 7'3". I had to be pushed," said Gaskins, the first track and field champion from K-State since Janet Haskins won the 10,000-meters in the 1990 outdoor championship.

Women's high jumper Gwen Wentland captured second place and all-America honors with a leap of 6'2 1/4".

Other men's standouts included Itai Margalit, who placed eighth with a jump of 7'1/2". Margalit, who has been battling an ankle injury, had the top collegiate jump of 7'5" at the Husker Invitational.

Thomas Randolph finished in third place in the 55-meter dash in a time of 6.26 seconds. He had advanced to the finals for the second consecutive year by running times of 6.3 and 6.28 in the preliminaries and semifinals, respectively.

Going into the competition, the all-American had the fourth best time in the 55-meter race by sprinting to a 6.17.

Last year, Randolph earned all-America status with an eighth-place finish in the same event.

With Gaskins and Randolph placing first and third in their events, the K-State men obtained eighth place. It was the highest ranking since the men placed sixth in 1987.

Francis O'Neill failed to qualify for the finals in the mile as he ran a time of 4:04.86.

He was off his pace of 4:03 earlier this season.

Women golfers use strong finish to claim 10th place

COLLEGIAN STAFF

The K-State women's golf team had a strong final round Friday to take 10th place in the Northern Illinois Snowbird Intercollegiate in Tampa, Fla.

The team was in 14th place after firing 348 for the first 18 holes of the 36-hole tournament Thursday. Friday, the golfers were able to re-group and shot a final round 325 to finish with a score of 673.

Coach Mark Elliott said the final-round score of 325 was a lot closer to where his squad should be scoring.

"We should be in the 320s," he said. "We should never be 330, let alone 348."

Individually, the golfers were much improved from the previous round.

Senior Valerie Hahn improved her first-round score by 15 strokes, shooting an 89 on Thursday and a 74 on Friday. The improvement put her in a tie for 22nd with a 163.

"She just struggled a little bit yesterday. She didn't putt the ball well and had a couple of bad holes," Elliott said. "She's a heck of a lot more of a 74 shooter than she is an 89 shooter."

Junior Denise Pottle fired an 84 on Friday. Pottle's two-day total of 166 was good enough to put her in a tie for 29th.

Redshirt freshman Debbie Chrystal was a pleasant surprise for Elliott by shooting a career-high 81. Chrystal placed 50th with a 36-hole total of 171.

Trisha Hoover, on her first golfing road trip, fired an 86 to move her to 60th with a score of 175.

Jacque Wright struggled throughout the tournament, firing an 88 each day. A total of 176 put Wright in 65th place.

Elliott said he knows for his team to be successful this season, he will need better outings from Wright, his number two player.

"Jacque has to play good for us to have a chance to be any good," Elliott said.

The Cinderella Season

K-State's wacky flight through the Big Eight conference tournament ended with a crash landing in the championship game, 68-56, at the hands of a Cinderella Missouri Tiger team at Kemper Arena.

The seventh-seeded Tigers, who defeated Iowa State and Oklahoma State to reach the finals, cruised in Kemper Arena during the second half and trailed fifth-seeded K-State only once.

"Coming into this game, Missouri knew they had to get a win to get into the NCAA tournament," forward Aaron Collier said.

"They just played a very hard aggressive game. They got all the loose balls and outrebounded us, and that's our bread and butter."

The larger Tigers outrebounded the Wildcats 33-27 for the game, clinching the victory with 20 free throws in the second half to grab their sixth Big Eight tournament championship and an automatic bid to the NCAA tournament.

"They just outplayed us," center Deryl Cunningham said. "All season we came up with the dirty plays, the little things no one likes to do. They came up with them. They beat us the whole game, period."

The Cats trailed early but fought back to grab a 26-24 lead on an off-balance jumper by Anthony Beane, but it proved to be K-State's only lead on the day.

A hook shot by Missouri's Jevon Crudup tied the score, and the Tigers regained the lead for good when K-State turned the ball over and guard Reggie Smith scored on a breakaway layup to gain a 28-26 advantage at halftime.

The Tigers went on a 10-3 run to start the second half, and when Missouri scored on a layup by Crudup on a desperation pass from Reggie Smith — who was falling out of bounds beyond the baseline — the Tigers seemed ready to put the game out of reach.

"Missouri got all the extra plays and the extra rebounds today," Altman said. "We've lived off that all year, and Missouri turned that around on us."

The Tigers also missed only one free throw in the last nine minutes of the game. Missouri came into the tournament shooting a conference-low 59.3 percent.

With K-State down by nine points with 4:17 left, Vincent Jackson was fouled and went to the line but missed the first free throw.

Missouri went on a 9-2 run after that point to clinch the victory.

"I thought that we played hard, got some pretty good shots that wouldn't go down in the second half," Altman said.

"We also had some put-backs that rolled in and rolled out that really hurt us when we were trying to stay close to Missouri."

After Missouri's run, K-State did no better than trade baskets with the Tigers.

While the Wildcats guaranteed themselves a spot in the NCAA Tournament with their weekend victories, many players said K-State's first appearance in the Big Eight Tournament final since 1987 was a bitter disappointment.

"We didn't finish what we came to do," Cunningham said. "We said when we left that we came to hit a home run. Not one, not two but three games."

But Coach Dana Altman said he couldn't be more proud of his team.

"The last game is always the freshest in your mind," Altman said. "But they're a fine bunch of young men, and they came here with a purpose — came up a little short — but no one should be disappointed with them."

"They're a fine group of young men."

Guard Anthony Beane, who was one of three K-Staters named to the all-tournament team, said it was now time to look ahead.

"It was nice — we made it this far," Beane said. "We wish we could have won the championship game. But all in all we had a good tournament."

"Now we need to go back and work hard in practice and get ready for the NCAA tournament."

Ski taken to hospital after elbow to jaw

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Askia Jones was not present during K-State's viewing of the NCAA Tournament match-ups last night.

Nor was he on the team bus when it arrived back in Manhattan.

Jones was taken to a local clinic following an injury to the jaw in the Wildcats' loss to Missouri in the Big Eight tournament championship game.

Missouri's LaMont Frazier was whistled for an intentional foul when he hit Jones with an elbow to the face with 11:39 left.

The game was delayed for several minutes while the referees conferred with the coaches. The foul resulted in two K-State free throws, both made by Jones.

Jones finished the game but went to the hospital to have his injury examined.

"I'm waiting for a call from the dentist," Coach Dana Altman said. "They were going to X-ray and make sure the jaw and everything was OK."

"It was a vicious blow," he said. "I knew it was bad during the game but watching the replays of it — I'm very disappointed that something like that would happen."

Frazier said he didn't intentionally hit Jones.

"It was just one of those things," he said. "I just reached the wrong way at the wrong time."

NCAA BOUND

Wildcats' victory over KU spurns flood of ticket sales

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — K-State's upset of Kansas on Saturday triggered a spontaneous ticket sale in Kemper Arena's outer concourse as Jayhawk fans tried to sell their tickets before heading home.

"Hey, I'm outta here," KU student Ashley Battles said. "It's just not worth it anymore. I'm real disappointed."

Battles was trying to find a buyer for his two tickets to Sunday's championship game.

Even though the seats were at mid-court, he was asking face value for the tickets, which cost him $32.50 apiece.

"KU hasn't been playing good ball," he said. "They haven't played good ball since the first week of our season. When we played Oklahoma on ESPN, that's when we were at our peak."

"KU has a trip to the tournament locked up, but that's no reason to let up."

Another crimson-and-blue fan did not want to wait. He was selling his four tickets for the championship round for $20 each.

"I'm kind of mad at K-State, and the last thing I want to see is them play again," the beleaguered fan said.

For the K-State fans at Kemper Arena, victory was sweet.

"I haven't missed one of these since 1948, and this is a great win," Manhattan resident John Stehley said. "Just great."

It makes a big difference in our basketball program.

"I thought they'd be pretty good, but I didn't think they'd be in the finals of the Big Eight tournament. It's great."

Most Wildcats talked about the extraordinary effort of the comeback in the final minutes.

"It's the hardest-working group of K-Staters for a long time," Topeka resident Ron Francis said. "We don't have many players that we really use, and they gave a really brave effort."

K-State graduate Claudia McVicker traveled from Garden City to see the team play and said the game's conclusion left her stunned.

"I've been to a lot of KU-K-State games since 1969, and this is the best win I ever saw," she said. "And I never gave up on Altman. I always thought Coach Altman could get us where we wanted to be."

Valory Kershner, from Lenexa, said she never imagined she'd be watching K-State play on Sunday.

"I really didn't think we'd be there," she said.

"I was hoping we'd play KU close, and that was our goal. Yesterday, I really wanted us to win so that would ensure us a bid to the NCAA tournament. But we just hoped we'd stay close today so we'd look good."

"Now I want us to win the whole thing."

And the KU fans leaving the building?

"Well, I hope the KU fans that stay root for us tomorrow," Kershner said. "I hope they hate Missouri more than they don't like us."

But even among strangers, there was some good-natured kidding in the arena about K-State's win.

Bobby Messick, a Jayhawk fan from Kansas City, Kan., and Nancy Roberts, a Wildcat fan from Baxter Springs, said they met each other by the concession stand and hung around afterwards to discuss the game.

"We out-played you," Roberts said. "They out-hustled us," Messick said.

"We're both Kansas people, and we both love the state of Kansas, and I'll be rooting for a K-State victory," said Messick, who stayed through Sunday.

But the majority of KU fans remained in shock. "I don't believe this," said one Jayhawk as she exited Kemper.

"I was rooting for K-State yesterday and now..."

The Wildcat bench erupts after Aaron Collier's slam dunk in the final seconds of the Cats' 74-67 win against Kansas put the game away. Collier took a no-look, behind-the-back pass from Vincent Jackson to put the final touches on the win.

Cats elated with No. 6 seed

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — From a hotel room in the Westin Crown Center, the K-State Wildcats waited for their invitation to dance.

The site — Orlando, Fla. No. 6 K-State, meet your opponent, No. 11 Tulane Green Wave.

"A No. 6 seed! Ah, ha!" the team cheered. And with the announcement on CBS, K-State returned for the 21st time to the NCAA tournament.

"Tulane! They're the Posse," Deryl Cunningham said. "We're playing the Posse. We're going to go there to win," he said. "That's what it's all about."

"When you put your mind to it, you can do anything. We've pulled off a lot of things."

But the main feeling around the room was excitement at the No. 6 ranking.

"We're a little surprised that we're a No. 6 seed," Altman said. "That puts us in the top 24. I guess the Big Eight tournament counts for something. A couple impressive wins bumped us up quite a bit."

"The match-up size-wise is the great thing," assistant coach Ken Turner said of Tulane.

"We're not going to be playing a team with a real big front line. I think it will be an evenly matched game because of the quickness factor."

Forward Ron Lucas said he is excited about his first game in the Big Dance.

"We just need to go and play," he said. "I'm really happy — I didn't think we were going to be a sixth seed. I thought we'd be around an eighth. But six playing 11, that's good."

For the NCAA Selection Committee meeting across the street in the Hyatt Regency Hotel, K-State was an easy choice to make.

"There's a team that played its way in," said Tom Butters, Chairman of the NCAA Division I Men's Basketball Committee.

"They played well. There's no denying that their recent performance had an effect on their seeding."

But if the Wildcats had lost in the first round of the Big Eight Tournament, would they still have made the field of 64?

"They would have certainly had consideration," Butters said.

"There was no pre-determination — that wasn't a question that had to be answered, because they started winning right off the bat."

"So, it was a question that never came up."

K-State's date with Tulane will be on Thursday, which will give the Wildcats only three days of rest before their game in Orlando.

"We were hoping we would get another day's rest," Altman said. "But hey, it's that time of year, and you don't need any rest."

Moving out of the Midwest Region did not bother the team either.

"When they flashed up Indiana No. 1 in Indianapolis, and then the eight-nine bracket — well, you don't want to be there," assistant coach Pete Herrmann said.

"Let's go down to Disney World and give it a shot."

Aaron Collier, K-State forward, sticks a hand in the face of Kansas' Patrick Richey during the Cats' second-round win against the No. 1-seeded Hawks. Collier finished with 11 points and a team-high nine rebounds.

Anthony Beane, K-State point guard, passes off during the Cats' victory against No. 1 seed Kansas.

Six conference teams get invited; MU win takes bid away from OU

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — No conference in America has a higher percentage of NCAA teams than the Big Eight. Or possibly more to prove.

The Big Eight had six tournament teams last year as well. But only Oklahoma State got past the second round. And the Cowboys didn't last past the third round of a tournament most Big Eight fans choose to forget.

"Hopefully, we'll make up this year for what happened to us last year," Big Eight Commissioner Carl James said. "If people get hot, we could win all our first-round games. The competition really steps up now for all our people. But I feel good about the teams we're matched up with."

The league had expected to get six NCAA teams but not these six. Missouri, which had a seven-game conference losing streak and was seeded seventh in the Big Eight tourney, won for the third time in six years and captured the league's automatic entry.

This proved bad news for Oklahoma (19-11), which joined Colorado as the Big Eight's only two non-NCAA entries.

Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs called the conference tournaments "dinosaurs."

"There was a time when those were neat because we thought it might get another team in," he said. "Now, what it does is pretty much get teams out."

"I thought we were strongly in the (NCAA) tournament before we ever went to the Big Eight tournament. Going in, according to all the power ratings, we were third in our league. We lose and Nebraska loses, yet Nebraska is in before us."

Tom Butters, the chairman of the NCAA selection committee, said Missouri did not boot the Sooners out.

"They did not," he said. "It is no doubt disappointing to Oklahoma. But when compared to other universities across the country, they didn't look the same as the people we put in the tournament. They won 19 games, but three (against non-Division I teams) did not count."

"So, they were 16-11. They won only nine Division I games since the first of the year."

"It would have been really difficult for the committee to have seven Big Eight teams," James said. "For an eight-team conference to have seven teams in, that would have been incredible."

Kansas (25-6), the regular season champion, was seeded No. 2 in the Midwest Regional and plays Ball State (26-7) Thursday in Chicago.

K-State, which lost to Missouri in the Big Eight tournament title game Sunday, is seeded sixth in the Southeast Regional and meets Tulane Thursday in Orlando, Fla.

"We've got our work cut out for us," Wildcat coach Dana Altman said. "Tulane is an awfully good team. I saw them play earlier this year, and they're a very athletic team."

Tulane is in the tournament for the second straight year. The Green Wave finished second to Louisville this year in the Metro Conference with a 9-3 record. Overall, Tulane was 21-8.

Iowa State drew the No. 8 seed in the Southeast Regional and meets UCLA Friday in Tucson, Ariz. Missouri is the No. 10 seed in the West Regional and travels Thursday to Salt Lake City to play Temple.

Nebraska is the No. 10 seed in the East regional and goes against New Mexico State Friday in Syracuse. Oklahoma State, with Big Eight player of the year Bryant Reeves, is seeded fifth in the Midwest and draws a Friday date with Marquette in Indianapolis.

"I think Oklahoma deserved to be in there," Kansas coach Roy Williams said. "Missouri winning the tournament and some other people winning tournaments pushed other people down the list and Oklahoma was one of them."

Only the Big Eight and the ACC have six teams in the 64-team bracket.

James said he believes Nebraska could have an especially tough assignment.

"Nebraska's got a tough game with New Mexico State," he said. "I think that could probably be our toughest game, even though all of them are tough. We feel we've got a great chance to get off to a great start."

K-State fans greet Cats in Manhattan

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

Not rain, snow, sleet, hail nor a loss to the Missouri Tigers in the Big Eight championship game could keep some of the Wildcat faithful from greeting the team Sunday night at Bramlage Coliseum.

More than 30 fans braved the chilly 35-degree temperature to welcome home K-State's first NCAA Tournament team since 1990.

"Thank you all for coming," Wildcat coach Dana Altman said amidst the cheers as he and his players got off the bus. "We really appreciate you all coming out here."

"But we have a lot more work to do."

Several students showed up to support their team.

"They've had a great season," Rob Billinger, junior in history, said. "They've given us something that we haven't had here in three or four years. They brought excitement back to the campus."

Rob Kulp, junior in agricultural economics, said he agreed.

"They haven't gotten much credit all season long," he said. "But they fought hard and did a lot of good things this season."

Chants of "Beat Tulane" rang out from the small entourage.

Dave and Kathy Wright, a Manhattan couple, said they followed the team bus in from Kemper Arena.

"We were at the tournament," Kathy Wright said. "We just saw the bus and wanted to come and congratulate them."

K-Rock was broadcasting live from Bramlage Coliseum when the team bus pulled in at 8:27 p.m.

Wildcat point guard Anthony Beane said gaining an NCAA berth overshadowed the loss to Missouri only six hours earlier.

"You could definitely say that," he said. "This feels great."

Mike Avery, junior in agribusiness, congratulates Wildcat point guard Anthony Beane Sunday night at Bramlage Coliseum. Avery was one of many K-State fans who showed up to greet the team when it arrived from Kansas City.

Brass tunes up for spring

ALICIA HALE

Collegian

The KSU Brass Ensemble has prepared for an unusually active performance schedule this spring, and director Gary Mortenson said the group is dedicated to putting on a good show.

"It's a pretty active group. For an ensemble that only meets for two hours a week, we do a lot. We meet on Sunday evenings for two hours. So, you really have to want to do it," he said.

The ensemble's biggest honor was its invitation to play at the New York Brass Conference on April 3. The group was selected by a taped audition and will be joined by the internationally known trumpet soloist, Allen Vizzutti.

"This is a really big thing for us," Mortenson said.

"Allen is known in more than 30 countries and has played for such performers as Prince, Barbra Streisand and a number of others."

Vizzutti will meet the ensemble in New York and be featured as its guest soloist in the New York Brass Conference performance.

"It is an incredible honor to be able to work with Allen Vizzutti as well as represent the music department and K-State as a whole because that is really what we're doing," said Jennene Shuey, senior in music education and trombone player for the ensemble.

"It's been a lot of hard work throughout the year, and the trip will be a great way to top it all off."

The K-State brass ensemble will be the only collegiate group performing, which adds to the honor for the group.

"It's a really big honor to be the only collegiate group performing. We are really excited about the trip," said Kevin Hupe, senior in music education and trumpet player for the ensemble.

The ensemble departs for New York City on March 31 and has appearances scheduled on the way at Augustana College in Rock Island, Illinois, and Bowling Green State University in Bowling Green, Ohio.

The group will arrive in New York City on April 2 and play its full recital for the New York Brass Conference on April 3. Vizzutti will perform his composition "Seance" during this concert.

On April 4, the ensemble will perform music from the Renaissance and Baroque eras for the Palm Sunday Service at St. Bartholomew's Episcopal Church.

In the past two years, four compositions have been commissioned for the Brass Ensemble.

Along with Vizzutti's "Seance," these include "Ssarb" by K-State Composer in Residence Hanley Jackson, "Equestrian Scenes" by Laura MacAdam and "Hungarian Music For Brass" by Robert Karoly.

Along with these four works, the ensemble's repertoire will include the music of Giovanni Gabrieli, Pietro Antonio Cesti, Percy Aldridge Grainger, Verne Reynolds and Zo Elliot.

About 20 to 25 students audition for positions in the Brass Ensemble each semester, and approximately 17 are accepted. Members may or may not be music majors.

The group usually presents one concert in the fall and one in the spring.

"We like to do a full recital each semester," Mortenson said.

The ensemble has gained increasing notoriety in recent years with its impressive record of commissions and appearances. In 1990 the Trumpet Ensemble performed "3 x 2" by Jackson, for the International Trumpet Guild Conference at the University of Maryland.

The following year, the combined Trumpet and Horn Ensembles presented "Signals" by Gregory Danner at the 1991 KMEA In-Service Workshop.

This year, the ensemble presented a recital for the Kansas Music Educators In-Service Workshop in Wichita.

"We all put a lot of hard work into this group, and I think it's all going to pay off," Shuey said.

"I'm sure the trip will be an experience that no one will forget."

The group will give its on-campus spring recital on March 16 in All Faiths Chapel.

Slamming with St. Joan

TRACY ARNOLD

Collegian

The lights are out, the strobe light is flashing. Five long-haired men, frozen in position. Then the drum beat begins.

The men, Rob Creek, lead vocals; George Karl, guitar; Ray Rodriguez, guitar; Rich Dane, bassist; Richie Rodriguez, drummer, compose the band Slam St. Joan.

The band was named after singer Joan Jett but not for admiration for her.

"Slam St. Joan once was named Valentino, but every place we go, somebody has that name," Ray said.

The band has been together six years under both names but have known each other a little longer.

Richie and Ray are twins. They recall meeting, if meeting is the precise word, Karl in high school.

"We wanted to kick his ass. He was the new kid in town," Ray said.

Then Karl met Dane at work.

The final member, Rob Creek was brought into this wild bunch through auditions.

Then the band came to life through their influences and inspiration.

"We're not just influenced by rock," Ray said.

"We are influenced by people from Ray Charles to Megadeth."

All the band members agreed Curley Joe Harper is also a big influence. They said he's a harmonica genius.

Creek however finds his influences in an entirely different place.

"My inspiration comes from a bottle. It's one liter inspiration and one ounce perspiration," he said.

Then there are the songs.

"We wrote a lot of new songs, and everything clicked in a big way," Creek said.

Creek wrote the lyrics to "Saved by Grace," the title track off the band's upcoming release. He said he feels it had a deep personal meaning to him.

Karl said they were "saved by the grace of goodness."

Whether it was grace or not, they made it to Manhattan, after battling pneumonia, bronchitis, and laryngitis.

"It's cool playing in Manhattan. There's a full house. The people are really loud. It's a cool place to be, and the people are cool," Ray said.

Karl said the management and people of Manhattan treated the band well.

They are not the only ones who treat the band well.

Coors is sponsoring the band on the road.

"We want to thank Coors because they help keep us drunk all the time," Karl said.

"We travel all the time. We get to a place and get set up. What else is there to do from 2 p.m. on? We have three cases of beer we gotta drink."

Traveling is what they do. After leaving Manhattan, the band is off to Iowa.

But what are people to expect from this band?

"Expect the unexpected," Karl said.

"Expect music," Creek added.

But above all, expect a lot of energy on stage. Hair flying, feet kicking and the music waiting — they are having one big party.

"It's not a serious business. People doing this for a living cannot be serious," Creek said.

Maybe the business isn't serious, but the music is. Songs such as the bluesy "Blinded by Fire" to the hard-hitting "Slam St. Joan" will be a part of the 12 song national release, due to hit stores April 12.

Patrons of the bar learned of the release from a flier passed around in Boulevard's 11th Street Bar & Grill by bar employees and the band.

"It's the best rock 'n' roll people will get in a compact disc for a long time. If they like to rock this is the record for them," Karl said.

Lady luck smiles on Casino Night

MARK JONES

The excitement of Las Vegas was in the air Saturday night.

High rollers let it ride, and winnings were spent at the prize auction at the 10th annual Casino Night and Dance for Marlatt Hall in the K-State Union Ballroom.

The gaming began at 8 p.m., as gamblers started picking up their $350 allowance in funny money and crowded around the tables until midnight.

Gamblers could try their luck at craps, blackjack, poker or roulette.

"The big winners were pretty much the people playing the craps tables because they paid off more often," Charles Pawloski, senior in electrical engineering, said.

Pawloski said he did well on craps at first, then got greedy and made a bad bet against the dice. "I went up to $9,000 before I lost it all," he said.

Winnings not returned to the dealers as losing bets were spent at the prize auctions.

Prizes included posters, compact discs, cassette tapes, hats, T-shirts, coupons and gift certificates.

"When I saw something I wanted, I bid on it. I got a computer game and a bunch of food," Michael Stieger, senior in electrical engineering, said.

Stieger spent just under $200,000 at the auction.

Many bidders got caught up in the fun and excitement of the auctions.

"The excitement of bidding made people bid higher than they had to bid," Pawloski said.

Prizes for the auctions were donated by local merchants.

Rob Ewing, Marlatt Hall events coordinator, said more than 200 prizes were donated by Manhattan merchants.

This is the 10th annual Casino Night for Marlatt Hall and was co-sponsored this year by Ford Hall, Ewing said.

SPRING BREAK

Spring break experiences can be both safe and fun

KRISTI HUMSTON

Collegian

Skiing, swimming and tanning during spring break can be safe and fun experiences as long as proper precautions are taken.

For individuals heading off toward the slopes, Toni Leuthold, a risk management coordinator at Winter Park Resort in Colorado, suggests taking it easy the first day to adjust to the altitude and to get acquainted with the skiing trails.

"If you haven't skied, we really recommend taking lessons," Leuthold said. "It's quicker, more enjoyable and safer."

She also said this helps friends stay friends and avoids frustration.

Leuthold said slopes, roads and base facilities are more crowded during spring break. Individuals should plan ahead.

She also suggested renting ski equipment the night before if people intend to be on the slopes first thing in the morning.

She said higher elevations can have a different effect on those who consume alcoholic beverages. Colorado State Law prohibits riding the lifts or skiing while under the influence of alcohol or drugs.

For people who are heading toward the beach, Bill Schumann, a spokesman for Volusia County Beach Department in Daytona Beach, Fla., said it is important to swim with at least one other person and never hesitate to ask for help.

"The most important thing to do is to swim in front of a lifeguard tower," Schumann said. He also suggested asking lifeguards about swimming conditions and being conscious of laws and safety regulations. While barbecues are permitted on many beaches, alcoholic beverages are not.

"Don't eat or mix alcohol with swimming — it is a bad idea," Schumann said.

Students who are setting out to get a suntan or hoping to get a tan as a result of the above activities, Tisha McCandless, owner of Tropical Tan, said it is a good idea to have a base tan before going out into direct sunlight to help build

SKI TIPS

■ A brochure from the Winter Park Ski Patrol lists the following tips:

1. Take skiing lessons if it's your first time skiing.
2. Read information boards.
3. Arrange a meeting time and place for groups in case of separation.
4. Keep off closed trails and posted areas.
5. Wear eye and skin protection because of the sun's intensity.
6. Alert the ski patrols of lost items.

up a tolerance to the sun. It is also important to protect the eyes and wear sunscreen.

"The type of sunscreen depends on a person's skin type," McCandless said. "No one should follow someone else's rules."

YOU'RE ASKING ME?by Cassandra
Duveaux

Hey guys, don't you think you should grow up just a little?

DEAR CASSANDRA,

This happened to me a couple of months ago, and I didn't know what to do. Can you give me some advice on how to react if there is a next time?

I was sitting in the K-State Union studying. I try not to listen to other people's conversations around me when I study, and mostly I'm so busy concentrating that I don't hear them anyway. But this one day four men were sitting about two tables away from me and talking loudly about a woman one of them had seen. The woman evidently had very large breasts.

One guy capped the conversation by saying enthusiastically, and very loudly, "If I had her tits in one hand and the remote control in another, I'd never leave the house."

When I heard this, it disturbed me so much that I stopped studying. I felt sad that this man was perpetuating the idea that all men are breast-grabbing dolts. I also felt sad that he and his friends seemed only able to appreciate some unnamed woman for her large breast size (and by extension, could only seem to enjoy women for physical attributes).

At this point, I could no longer ignore their conversation — it was too loud, too close and too unkind to ignore. My concentration was shot for studying. I wanted to say something to them about their rudeness, to people in general and to me as a person trying to study. But I realize when you study in the Union, you're taking your chances and may have to hear some social conversation you don't care for.

Still, I felt really upset by their topic of conversation. Was I right to just get up and study elsewhere (as I did), or should I have said something? If I spoke up, what should I have said?

Still Wondering

DEAR WONDERING,

You did the right thing by getting up and moving. The boorish men at the table would not have been fazed by any comment you could have made. It would have only encouraged them. You also need to remember that people still have the right to make stupid and tasteless comments.

I hope the obnoxious soul (and others like him) who uttered the offensive remark reads this and realizes that he has some growing up to do.

"When you're saving for retirement, your future is at stake — so insist on a rock-solid investment. In Manhattan, that means an Individual Retirement Account from Commerce Bank. For safety and performance, no other financial institution can compare.

The chart shows how your IRA earnings will grow at a faster rate than other kinds of investments, because of the tax deferral allowed under IRS regulations. You'll keep more of your money for retirement — and depending on your income and filing status, you also may be eligible for an IRA tax deduction.

Come in and let me show you how a Commerce IRA can help you meet your financial goals, even if you have a retirement plan at work. I'll help you choose a Fixed or Variable Rate Certificate of Deposit — or other attractive Commerce IRA investment. But don't put it off — April 15 is the deadline for contributing to your 1992 IRA.

For a smart, safe investment in your future, count on an IRA from Commerce Bank."

Note: This chart assumes a married couple (in the 28% tax bracket) invests in a regular certificate of deposit that earned 5% capitalization annually. This example assumes that the IRA owner is not eligible for tax deductible contributions, but is eligible for tax-deferral of annual earnings, according to the Tax Reform Act of 1986. Please contact your tax advisor to determine your eligibility. Substantial interest and tax penalties may apply for early withdrawals, other restrictions may apply.

May, where we will invite a guest speaker from the University," Glatz said.

The fall event is not always directly related to events at K-State but is a good time for the club to get together and have fun.

"Two or three years ago we went to the Northern Illinois game, but sometimes we will just get together and go to a play," Glatz said.

Sometimes events are planned with other schools' alumni associations, Renz said.

Having a club in Lawrence would seem to lend itself to coordinating events between K-State and KU alumni. That is not the case, Fike said.

"A few years ago, we tried to get KU interested in a joint thing with the golf tournament because a lot of KU people play in the tournament, but they weren't interested," he said.

they usually end up at the same shows, spending free time giving each other a hard time.

"Where you find one, you usually find the other," Williamson said. "We both run a ranch. Cutting is a total release for us."

"It's just like working with cows, calves and yearlings. It's just like what you do in the pasture — it's just competitive and with rules," Koger said.

"Yeah, there's no rules in the pasture," Williamson said with a laugh.

The herd holders and turnback men who work in the arena to help the cutter are very important, Koger said.

"The herd holders watch where you are in relation to the herd. The two turnback men keep the cow turned back and coming straight at you. They can make you or break you," Koger said.

Selecting the steer to work is no small feat.

"You want a fresh steer, one that will set up, which is standing and looking at the horse. You look for brightness," Koger said.

"If their head is up, and they are blowing snot at you, you don't want it," Williamson said.

Candidates discuss campus issues

Administrators (BOCA) National Property Maintenance Codes would be available in the SGA office for prospective renters to examine.

"This is a win-win situation for everyone except those who don't want to take care of their property," Walters said.

To keep the administration aware of the housing situation, Walters said he and Bautista will invite President Jon Wefald and Director of the Department of Housing and Dining Services Chuck Werring to spend one night each semester in a residence hall room and Jardine apartment.

"I guess if they want to do their laundry they'll have to bring their own quarters now," Walters said.

Walters said he is also concerned with the transportation system.

He said his proposal is to make a two-level parking facility at East Stadium, which would add 1,000 parking spaces.

Walters also said four buses would be used to transport students to four campus sites. Two additional buses would provide transit from the residence halls to Wal-Mart, Westloop and Manhattan Town Center.

Making students more aware of how student government works was also discussed by Walters.

"Maybe it seems trivial, but I think SGA is based on the premise that we'll make the decisions now and take the heat later," he said. "We want to turn that around."

Mader, junior in agricultural economics, began by explaining his candidacy.

"When people ask me why I want to run, the word that comes to mind is concern," he said.

Mader then took time to outline those concerns.

"The biggest issue we will face in the next three years is the price of education," he said.

Mader said a student fee watchdog would be one of his priorities.

He said transportation is one of the issues for his campaign as well.

"If the parking problem is going to be solved, it's going to be solved by the K-State administration and the students."

Helping K-State students get jobs in today's competitive market is another of Mader's concerns.

"As society has changed, there needs to be more emphasis on marketing K-State students."

He said this could be accomplished by advising undecided students of their skills and aptitudes, and by expanding Career Planning and Placement services.

Mader said college councils and residence halls need to have roundtable meetings to share ideas.

After the candidates spoke, the audience posed questions about Lafene Health Center and campus parking.

"The transportation system has got to happen now," Walters said. "When they start working on Farrell, they're going to close Mid-Campus Drive, and we're going to lose 500 parking spaces."

Mader said that in observing the city commission, he does not think they will participate in a transportation system.

"They are not willing to commit those dollars at this time," he said. "That's why it has to start on campus. You can't just roll over one morning and create a bus system."

The possibility of more bike routes and bike racks on campus was also raised by the audience.

Skoog responded to the question, noting that he had just come from a meeting where $5,000 was requested of Student Senate to buy 10 bike racks.

He said the money would have gone to the administration, which would buy the racks, while permits may soon be needed for bicycles on campus.

"There are proposals being tossed around, and all of them cheat students out of money," he said.

No, there won't be any kangaroos, and Crocodile Dundee won't make a guest appearance. But when the Australian Chamber Orchestra comes to McCain, you'll get a chance to experience what The Bulletin with Newsweek (Australia) calls "a stratospheric standard" in classical music.

The group, led by hyper-talented young Aussie director, Richard Tognetti at lead violin, will perform works by Mozart, Haydn, Bartók and Weber.

Joining the ACO is clarinet soloist, Daniel McKelway. The Seattle Post-Intelligencer characterized his style as "like a trapeze artist, stunning us with his risky tricks and persuading us by his poetry."

Don't miss this performance by the finest young musicians Australia has to offer.

Tutors teach speech to foreign students

Conversation skills improve with knowledge of slang

TRACY ARNOLD

Collegian

Imagine not knowing that cool meant good, or bogged down meant stressed or tired.

International students might not know the slang terms Americans use in everyday life, but the conversational English program at K-State is set up to help.

Ahmed Al-Najem, graduate student in accounting and participant in the program, said he is very interested in learning new vocabulary.

"I need to know words and vocabulary. The program helps with this," Al-Najem said.

To be a tutor or tutee, one must fill out an application. The application asks for name and phone number, and for hobbies and interests. Motaz Hourani said this is so the volunteer and the international student will have some things in common.

"It's best to have a partner the same age and education level because it's easier to communicate with them than those of another generation," Al-Najem said. "You can go to football games, movies or go outside and play."

After getting a partner, a letter is sent to the volunteer giving the name, phone number and some biographical data of the international student. The volunteer is asked to initiate contact.

"I ask tutors to start discussion and get the international student to speak English," Hourani said.

A list of cross-cultural topics is sent with the letter. This includes topics like verbal taboos, invitations, books and more to discuss. There are also suggestions such as role playing.

The topics don't have to be followed. Some, like Al-Najem, have their own strategy.

"I treat my partner like a friend, not just a tutor. We eat dinner or have a drink," he said.

This is about all it takes, since not much time is required to be part of the program. Hourani said only one hour a week is necessary, but more time can be spent with the partner. It is left up to the participants and their schedules.

Time is not the only consideration. The language of the international student may be important too.

"A problem I have is some people like to be matched with Spanish-speaking students because they're taking Spanish, but I have more Chinese, for example, than Spanish. Some tutors aren't matched for this reason," Hourani said.

Volunteers and international students may apply any time. Hourani said as long as there is a partner to match, one can get involved with no problem.

Donna Davis, director of the International Student Center, said the program was started by women in the community who had a grant. She came in as a volunteer in 1978 and helped keep the program going.

1993 ASIA-PACIFIC FILM TOUR

Chinese students appreciate warmth of Americans at K-State but miss native food

SYLVESTER CHRISTIE

Collegian

China has the largest group of international students at K-State with 212 students.

They have formed an organization to help each other adapt to campus life, socialize and maintain their traditions.

Lisheng Xu, graduate student in chemical engineering, and president of the Chinese Student and Scholar Friendship Association, said it is not surprising as China also has the largest number of international students nationally and the largest population in the world.

The purpose of the association is to promote friendship and maintain traditions among Chinese students, visiting scholars and professors from China, he said.

The association also encourages new Chinese students to participate in the activities of the International Coordinating Council, helps to find housing and to adapt to college life.

Yi Guo, graduate student in biochemistry, said though

Chinese students appear to stay together this is not an unusual phenomena.

This is common among students from other countries, but it is more obvious among Chinese students as they outnumber the other groups, she said.

A disadvantage of Chinese students staying together is they do not get to improve their ability to speak English, Xu said.

Wheel to be taken out of young hands

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The House Transportation Committee on Monday considered a bill that its author, Sen. Mark Parkinson, R-Olathe, said would essentially remove 14-year-old drivers from Kansas roads.

The bill, passed by the Senate, 30-10 on Feb. 18, would allow only those 14-year-olds living or working on farms who have passed drivers' education courses to drive. However, they would be able to drive legally only while engaged in farm-related activities.

All 15-year-olds would be eligible to obtain learners permits after passing a drivers' education course.

Parkinson said that no states allow 14-year-olds to drive as Kansas does. He added that nationwide, 14-year-olds have the greatest number of accidents per mile of any age group.

"In my mind, we just drew the line at the wrong place," Parkinson said. "We drew it at 14. It should have been 15."

He said that any inconvenience the restriction would cause parents who chauffeur their children to and from school would be justified by the number of lives that would be saved.

Parkinson said the bill had traditionally been supported in urban areas, including Johnson County, Wichita and Topeka, and support for the bill was growing in rural regions such as Hays, Salina and Garden City, which had opposed raising the driving age in the past.

► SLIDE SHOW CELEBRATES WOMEN IN HISTORY

KATHY WASKO

Collegian

As part of the celebration of Women's History Month at K-State, the Women's Resource Center sponsored a slide presentation on Monday afternoon. The presentation was titled, "They Came to Stay: African American Women's Contribution to Their People."

It was put together by Labarbara Wigfall, assistant professor of landscape architecture, and Deidra Franklin, an English teacher at Junction City High School.

► KANSAS ARTIST 'GRANDMA' LAYTON DIES AT 83

Elizabeth "Grandma" Layton, an artist who took up drawing in her 60s, died Monday at the age of 83. Layton had suffered a stroke three weeks ago and died of pneumonia.

"I think we've really lost a pioneer in Kansas art," Jessica Reichman, art curator of the Marianna Kistler Beach Art Museum, said.

K-State currently owns about nine of Layton's drawings and lithographs, Reichman said.

Layton took up drawing to help conquer the depression that had plagued her for decades. Usually, she used herself and her husband Glen as models for High School.

"When we got together, we decided that we wanted to do something a little different. We initially did this project for K-State's Black History Month," Franklin said.

The slide show was a presentation of various black women who have made a difference, like entertainer Diana Carroll and Harriet Tubman, a conductor of the underground railroad.

The presentation opened and ended with a poem by Mari Evans called, "They Came To Stay."

works that provided biting commentary on AIDS, women's rights, the right to die and censorship. Her work was exhibited in a one-woman show at the Smithsonian Institute last year. She also had a large showing scheduled for June 4 through July 21 at the School of Art Institute in Chicago.

"Not all of her subjects were easy to view or digest," Reichman said. "But I think she made us look at ourselves and others around us and make us appreciate what we have as human beings."

City/government editor Shawn Bruce contributed to this story.

KING FORUM

Three forums are planned to provide the community with an opportunity to express feelings and emotions about the Rodney King federal civil rights case and its implications for race and ethnic relations.

The first forum is scheduled for 3-5 p.m., today in the K-State Union Big 8 Room. Additional forums will be from 3-5 p.m., April 7 and April 28 in the K-State Union 213.

'Tough' market complicates ticket sale

TRACY ARNOLD
Collegian

Ticket sales are much more complicated than just the exchange of money for a ticket.

"There's no one common thread running through the University that 90 percent of students like a certain type of music. This market is a real tough sale," Charles Thomas, director of Bramlage Coliseum, said.

Yet, tickets to concerts do sell in Bramlage, Thomas said. He said the reason for this is that there is a lot of country right now.

Phil Chamoff, general manager of the Salina Bicentennial Center, said he agreed. He said ticket sales at the Bicentennial Center have also been good.

At the Black Crowes concert, 3,100 tickets were sold. He said this was good because most of the halls where the Crowes have played range from 2,100 to 4,000 seats.

Shows like Motley Crue, Garth Brooks and Def Leppard have sold out at Bramlage, Thomas said.

But to get the good tickets, people have to wait in line or hope to get through quickly on the phone.

"Rock 'n' rollers learned when to buy tickets. This new country is a new area," Thomas said.

He said people who buy tickets to country concerts don't wait in long lines like people who buy tickets to rock concerts.

But Chamoff has found this to be different.

"There were four tents set up by people who wanted Alan Jackson tickets," he said.

So what about the phone lines? Does the phone get picked up before the person who waited in line gets help?

Thomas said the phones and line are worked separately. Everything is computerized.

"We take ticket orders as we pick them up. If a phone rings and there is a person in line, whoever gets in the computer first gets the better seats," he said.

Sometimes better seats cost more money.

"Some promoters are going to a two- and three-tier system. For example, the Tanya Tucker sold $21 for the closest seats, then $18 and finally $14," Chamoff said.

Thomas said prices of the tickets also depend on the promoter.

"Promoters carry an overhead and set prices to break even. We don't carry that overhead," he said.

Tickets typically run $17 to $19.

Some shows like Van Halen have a higher price. Tickets for the Suzy Bogguss, Sawyer Brown and Restless Heart show were $20, he said.

Prices affect ticket sales, but timing is also very important, Chamoff said.

"Timing of a concert affects ticket sales greatly. We run into things like other shows in town and in Manhattan. A KU basketball game on TV or a K-State vs. KU football game may decrease sales," he said.

Thomas said he tries to let the promoter know about activities that may compete with a show.

"We try our best not to schedule two major concerts next to each other with our population base," Thomas said.

He said sometimes because of the large amount of entertainment to be scheduled, shows do conflict.

"This market is really different than any other. The diversity of the University has a lot to do with that," Thomas said.

The things people will do for...

MONEY

story by Lynn Anderson

K-State students go to all limits to pay the bills by earning money in unique fashions.

Although some students may claim their jobs stink, Karen Pearson, junior in pre-professional elementary education, puts up with on-the-job crap, grinding pig feces for minimum wage in Weber Hall's swine lab.

"I basically analyze pig fecal material to determine how feeding can be improved," Pearson said. "At first it was gross, but after you come up with results it's neat to see the numbers."

Pearson said she works for graduate student Kelly Wondra, who is working on his master's degree in animal science. Pearson tests for different minerals after weighing small portions of the sample, she said.

"The samples come from pigs lined up on a farm and put in different groups," Pearson said. "They scientifically gather the samples. I have never gathered the samples—I only grind it."

Jeff Chauza, sophomore in business administration, gets shot in the arm twice a week, donating plasma for extra spending money.

"It's kind of hard to explain," Chauza said. "I have a lot of friends who work at the plasma center. So, it's kind of for social reasons as well as money reasons."

Chauza said he rakes in $25 a week, which tallies $100 a month.

"It only takes one hour, and I'm helping other people. So, in the long run it's worthwhile," Chauza said.

He has a job on campus as well, working with children at the Child Development Center.

"I spend the extra cash on my toys," he said. "I spend it on my bicycle and rollerblades because they always break."

Brian Martinie, senior in geology, has combined his two jobs and created his own limousine and lawn services.

"The limousine service is just starting to catch on," he said. "I haven't driven anyone famous yet. I just opened in the first week of December, and I almost drove Sinbad. Since then, there's really only been one concert. Usually, groups bring their own drivers with them."

Martinie said this is his third year in the lawn and landscape business and plans on increasing his business through immediate advertisements.

"I've already picked up between eight to 10 lawns," Martinie said. "And we get contracted for sororities, which is mostly first-come, first-serve."

Taking on both responsibilities by himself, Martinie attributes his success to his superb time management skills.

A less stable job, but economically more feasible, is modeling.

Rachel Ricketts, freshmen in pre-medicine, began modeling in eighth grade because her mother was worried she was becoming a tomboy.

"My mom sent me to finishing school, and a modeling agency saw me and asked me to model for them," Ricketts said. "I do print work for Spiegel, and I've done a commercial for Furrs and a little bit of ads. I'm too short for runways."

The 5-foot-5 Ricketts said she is currently under contract with Spiegel and last weekend was flown to Tulsa for pictures in its "CW Productions" catalog.

"The photographer does a lot in deciding when and where you can do shots," Ricketts said. "You can do some pretty crazy stuff, too. It can be 30 degrees outside, and you can be in shorts, but if the sun is shining the photographer will want to take pictures, and you still have to look like you're smiling."

The monetary benefits increase with the length of time put into a single modeling session, as well as the number of outfits displayed, Ricketts said.

"This past weekend I made $500 because it was a long shoot," Ricketts said. "It took about an hour and a half, and I modeled 12 outfits."

Continual upkeep of one's health is important in her profession, Ricketts said.

"I have strict weight requirements," Ricketts said. "They place a lot of emphasis on skin tone. My agent tells me how often to work out. They are also very concerned with the image of my portfolio."

Being treated like a queen is what Ricketts said she likes best.

"You're treated like royalty," she said. "Last weekend they flew me in and then gave me a rented car. It's like you're a movie star. It's nice."

Not quite the plush lifestyle of a model, Pat Shriver, junior in construction science, is employed as a part-time firefighter for the Manhattan Fire Department. He said his job is rewarding in a more heroic nature.

"The most dramatic experience was probably the fire at the Pi Kappa Phi fraternity on Fairchild," Shriver said. "I was a call-back, and it was during the summer. It just so happened that day I had been in the sun all day, and I had this awful sunburn."

"So, when we had this larger fire, I was called back, and there I was with a bad sunburn running around, manning hoses and directing water. My suspenders were gouging into my back, and the heat was burning my back. It was pretty painful."

In preparation for these feats, Shriver said firefighters have to pass physical agility tests, take first-aid courses and continually train.

"It's a good job for college students," Shriver said. "You feel like you're actually learning something. You're not just bagging groceries at the store or doing the fast-food thing. It's neat because I'm learning about city operations, and since my major is construction science it sort of deals with it."

Shriver said firefighters make less the first year, and then after a full fiscal year they earn about $5,200, tax included.

"I remember when we were working on the Catholic school fire, and it was so cold," he said. "I was dragging around these hoses that were frozen, and the lady police officer asked me, 'How can you do that?' I told her that I enjoyed it. And that's it—you really have to enjoy your job to be a fireman."

Getting dangerously smarter

THE ISSUE

Many nations are learning to harness nuclear energy for weapons.

WE SUGGEST

Every nation should open itself to global monitoring.

Throughout the victories of the Persian Gulf War, one dark possibility hung like a sword on a thread over the heads of most allied nations.

That possibility was that Iraq could have nuclear capabilities.

The threat was real, and many said if the war did nothing else, it kept Saddam Hussein from attaining nuclear power.

However, a new problem has presented itself.

Plutonium.

A uranium byproduct, plutonium is treated as a waste product by many civilian nuclear power plants throughout the world. At this point, this "waste product" is essentially available to whoever can get their hands on it.

Roughly nine pounds of plutonium are needed to fashion a nuclear warhead, and for countries such as Iraq, the market is open.

Eighty percent of the world's plutonium is in the hands of the acknowledged nuclear powers: the United States, Britain, France, China and the former Soviet Union. This, however, leaves 20 percent unaccounted for, a low — yet uncomfortable — number.

According to the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute, Iran and North Korea are high on the list of countries suspected of manufacturing nuclear warheads.

North Korea, which denies it is developing atomic weapons, has even gone so far as to withdraw from the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty to avoid inspection of its nuclear activities. A few weeks ago, they reportedly were offering to sell a nuclear weapon to any country that could pay cash.

The need for annual U.N. reports on the nuclear holdings of all countries is coming to a head. Otherwise, the only way we'll know for sure if a hostile country has nuclear capability is if they use it against us.

Condom sense VS. Common sense

"Don't let your luck run out. Use condom sense," was the slogan for last week's Condom Sense — Safer Break Week '93 sponsored by Lafene Health Center. The headline for the story covering condom sense week in the March 8 Collegian read, "Condoms promoted as alternative to luck." Common sense and condom sense, when juxtaposed, are the same idea — so we have been taught. projected in the Collegian's headline.

condoms are not an alternative to luck but the embodiment of luck.

good point. Condoms are safer in the sense that a parachute that opens 90 percent of the time is safer than a parachute that opens only 50 percent of the time. I'm hoping you're not planning many jumps, though.

Common sense, on the other hand, reveals the slogan and message of "safe sex" to be the preeminent oxymoron of our time.

With sex, the real alternative to condoms, luck and the myth of "safe sex" is abstinence. The only form of safe sex is between two mutually faithful partners for life — as in the confines of a marriage.

"Get real" and "face reality" are common responses to abstinence because people, including teenagers, are going to have sex no matter what. Yet, when adult role models depict sex as something that teenagers will live out that imposed reality. Kids will do drugs, but we don't pass out needles and rubber hoses. We simply tell them not to do drugs.

JOHN HART

Condom sense is the belief that condoms allow for safe sex despite the fact that when used as the sole means of protection, condoms have a standardized failure rate of 15.7 percent during the course of a year.

Condom sense is the belief that condoms are an excellent method of AIDS prevention despite the fact that the HIV virus is one-tenth the size of the smallest detectable hole in a condom, as confirmed by the Centers for Disease Control and the Food and Drug Administration. This despite the fact that among married couples using condoms where one partner was infected with the HIV virus, 17 percent of the healthy partners became infected within a year and a half, according to the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Condom sense is the belief that "safe sex" education will reduce the number of teen pregnancies and slow the spread of sexually transmitted diseases. This despite the fact that since 1970, when the federal government began its family planning program promoting contraceptive use, nonmarital teen births have risen 62 percent, and there are currently more than three million new cases of teenage STD's each year.

I admit that whoever decided to call last week "Safer Break Week" instead of "Safe Break Week" had a good point. Condoms are safer in

The government spends as much on AIDS research as it does on cancer research. One person dies of AIDS for every 35 that die of cancer, and AIDS is nearly 100-percent preventable, when a person doesn't share needles and practices abstinence until marriage. We are in the midst of an AIDS crisis. Yet, educators seem unwilling to adopt crisis measures — measures that would certainly succeed.

I have faced reality. I grew up in reality. I have been educated about reality and have found the reality of sexual behavior in this country to be extremely destructive.

When faced with a destructive reality such as child abuse do we say "that's just the way it is," "get real" and "face reality?" The reality of sexual behavior, not our treatment of reality, is where change needs to occur.

As college students, I assume sex education is in our past — I'm sure most of us have decided how to respond to the pressures and pleasures of sex. However, what you teach your future children will affect my future children.

The current "safe sex" approach to sex education has failed miserably, leaving a trail of carnage in its path. So let's put myths, half-truths and hollow "safe sex" propaganda aside and replace condom sense with common sense.

► EVOLUTION

The support for evolution is significant

Editor,

John Hart rarely puts columns in the Collegian I pay attention to, but the column in the March 9 Collegian struck me as intriguing when I read "Evolution plagued by dogma" and Hart's accusation of no facts supporting evolution.

I am Catholic myself and believe in divinely controlled evolution, but as a future biologist, I feel that the "facts" should be laid out as they stand. Some data should be acknowledged that Hart missed. Sorry John, if this rises over your head, but I have to do it.

Fact — human beings share some genes with other species.

Fact — human beings share similar hemoglobin and myoglobin with other mammal species.

Fact — viruses can pick up oncogenes, carry them as protooncogenes in latent viruses and infect new cells with the oncogene. Oncogenes code for cancer cell-stimulating proteins. This is evolution in process.

Fact — many microorganisms share similar ribosomal RNAs between different species. Gee, I wonder if it was just coincidence?

Final fact — that all living creatures on this planet share similar metabolites and use many metabolites in similar biochemical reactions means all living things must have come from some common source.

There is a ton of information supporting evolution, with which I named only a few. Ridiculing evolution is the same as ridiculing the technology for modern medicine, agricultural research and development, and environmental studies. Fossils may not be good evidence by your standard, but genetic analysis can't lie.

► SAFETY

Aggressive drivers can end up paying big

Editor,

I would like to comment on Tirazheh Anissy's letter, printed on March 4 in the Collegian, on the subject of pedestrian safety.

Let's look at this topic on a more basic level. I am reminded of an article printed in 1988 in a small St. Louis paper. In short, the article explained how a woman had caused a head-on automobile accident when she swerved to miss a squirrel that was running the road. The moral of the story was that you don't risk an accident and possible fatality to avoid hitting a small animal like a squirrel. However, if the animal is significantly larger, you swerve to miss it.

How does this relate to Anissy's letter? Well, pedestrians have a pretty good weight, averaging around 160 pounds, and a relatively high center of gravity. This means that if you hit a pedestrian with anything smaller than a 4x4 truck, more than likely your victim will clear the grille, slide up the hood and join you in the front seat of your car via the windshield.

Anissy, I assure you that if you hit me, I will come through your windshield causing a great deal of damage to your car, and my lawyer will make sure that you support my family for a very long time.

I would like all of the aggressive drivers on campus to remember this the next time they bear down on a pedestrian crossing the road. A few moments of inconvenience is a small price to pay to avoid having to pick pieces of windshield out of your forehead and having to clean the blood of both you and your victim off your nice upholstery. Not to mention the price of supporting your newly acquired dependents, the family of your victim.

► FUTURE

Children's health is high on Clinton list

Editor,

"It is a spiritually impoverished nation which allows its children to be among its poorest inhabitants," Children's Defense Fund founder Marian Wright Edelman said. And, unfortunately, she is right.

Each year, 20 percent of children are growing up in poverty, a 21-percent increase since 1970. Approximately 330,000 children are homeless in the United States today. Kansas children aren't doing much better. They lag behind in immunization by age two (50 percent are not fully immunized), 24 percent are in poverty, and 19 percent will never graduate from high school.

Many Americans feel that children are as much an economic resource as clean air, abundant water, good roads and infrastructure. When they grow into productive adults, they are the leaders and workers of tomorrow. If they do not, society pays dearly for the consequences with prison, hospitals and treatment programs, unskilled workers and a guarantee that problems continue into the next generation.

However, even though these are widely held beliefs, many Americans are unwilling to support children's programs.

President Clinton has promised to leave no child behind in his economic stimulus package. In it, he is offering new funding for the childhood immunization program to reach out to families and immunize up to one million more children this summer, additional support to keep Head Start pre-school programs open this summer throughout America and a new summer program to put 700,000 teenagers to work in summer jobs this year.

President Clinton is giving us an opportunity to invest in our future, and it is time we treat kids as capital, put our money where our mouth is and devote more resources to children.

An investment in America's children will guarantee a future for all of us.

► COMPLAINT

Movies should carry warning about content

Editor,

I am writing in response to the March 11, Women's Film Festival, presented by the Union Programming Council film committees. I saw it advertised in the Collegian with times, the place and what was showing, but there was no explanation as to what I was getting myself into.

The problem was that I was appalled by what I saw Thursday night, which included scenes that offended me. I felt this particular film (the second film shown) had nothing to do with Women's History Month. I did get up and leave because I was sick to my stomach. And it wasn't because it was showing sexual activity with people of the same sex.

I don't condemn the fact that they make these films, or that they show them, but I do condemn the fact that the public is not warned as to what they are about to view. I don't care with whom people have sex, where or how — I just don't care to watch. And had I known these films were going to show these scenes, I would not have gone.

I am in Big Brothers/Big Sisters, and I had considered taking my little sister to it. I am very glad I did not. In the future, I would appreciate, as I'm sure others with children or young friends would, ratings for all movies shown to the public.

I'm sending my sympathies to many of the 1,000 fans that share my regrets on hearing about the passing away of our long-time friend, Dev Nelson. Dev was always a big influence in my motivation as a coach, and I enjoyed listening to him about K-State basketball and the Big Eight.

Somebody up there likes them (or loud guitars)

God's favorite or not, this band rocks - when they are not fishing or interviewing

RICHARD ANDRADE
Collegian

If there really is a supreme deity who rules the universe and if he/she/it happens to have a particular fondness for any one musical group, three guys from Minneapolis probably have as good a chance as anyone.

But, by calling themselves God's Favorite Band, perhaps they have a leg up on the competition.

Combining a startlingly appealing mix of fast and loud guitars, some lyrics about fishing and cows and a band member whose latest achievement was getting to interview KISS vocalist Paul Stanley, GFB has hit a success streak in the college rock arena.

To peg GFB to any musical trend seems to make them squirm uncomfortably. Like most bands, they'd rather not be pegged at all.

But with the obvious and honorable influences of two of the Twin Cities' music pioneers — the Replacements and Hüsker Dü — as well as more recent but arguable links to Soul Asylum and Dinosaur Jr., GFB has nothing to worry about. They know well enough that no more than a guitar, a bass guitar and a drum set are all that are needed to make powerful, mean music.

God's Favorite Band is Chris Benson (guitar, bass and vocals) Jim Crego (guitar, bass and vocals) and Andy Wolf (drums). They are signed to the Twin/Tone record label.

Currently in the midst of a nationwide tour in support of their much-ballyhooed recent release, "In Through the Outhouse," Benson hopped on a truckstop payphone outside of Dallas, Texas, to chat. Here are some clips on a variety of topics:

On fishing — "We fish a lot, whenever we can. Music can kind of interfere with fishing stuff, which sucks, but it's to be expected."

The opening track on their latest album is the driving "Cut Bait," a song about the joys of fishing.

On interviewing Paul Stanley — "It was really pretty cool. I was completely sick at the time. So I'm sure I came off as a complete idiot, all nasally."

On assisting younger bands, such as the Lawrence band Zoom, whom they acknowledged in the liner notes of "In Through the Outhouse" and local band Truck Stop Love — "We meet a lot of cool people, really good bands. Truck Stop Love is a prime example. We're always willing to help them out in any way. What comes around goes around."

On influences — "It's different for all of us. I think the first record I bought was Donny Osmond. Andy likes surf music ... definitely Blue Oyster Cult."

On their penchant for switching instruments during sets — "We've gotten slagged by people before, 'Why the fuck do they switch?' Like it's a gimmick or something. We do it out of necessity. We don't do it to show people we can play both bass and guitar. Anybody who can play bass can play guitar."

And finally, the lyrics from the unrequited bovine love song "Delilah" — "Delilah/You chew so slow/I can't let you go/Cause you need me you know/Delilah/ Oh, I better go/Because it smells out here ..."

God's Favorite Band may not

really be what their name claims, but any band that subtly slips a cover of the Partridge Family's "C'mon Get Happy" into a set dominated by loud, yet weirdly addictive, guitar noise, can't be all bad.

We support safer sex

Personal contracts provide plan for sexual encounters

KRISTI HUMSTON
Collegian

Signing a personal contract for a safe and healthy sex life is one way to prepare for sexual encounters during spring break.

Cindy Burke, director of health education at Lafene Health Center, and Kelley Fink, a health educator at Lafene, advise students to design a contract among themselves before leaving for spring break.

Fink said making a conscious effort to understand and use contracts can be quite valuable during spring break encounters.

In the past, students have made contracts with themselves about sexual matters and group contracts concerning designated drivers.

One type of group contract states that one person in a group will never be left alone or allowed to leave with someone alone.

"Writing it down helps keep students prepared," Fink said.

In a contract produced by Dr. Robert A. Hatcher, it is stated that pregnancy, herpes, chlamydia and AIDS are some of the consequences of sexual intercourse.

More than 50 percent of all pregnancies in the United States are unintended, and from 10 to 25 percent of college and university women test positive for chlamydia.

"You can't just look at AIDS as being the big issue," Burke said. "All sexually transmitted diseases are a problem."

Burke emphasized the importance of education and learning responsible behaviors.

"If you choose to become sexually active, make sure you use a condom," she said.

Fink added that using a condom is not 100 percent protection, but it is safer than unprotected sex.

Being in a strange environment and becoming sexually active with someone you know nothing about can take its toll across campus, too.

Burke said one of the big concerns is that students can become infected with a sexually transmitted disease and bring it back to K-State. This puts other students at risk and often leads to an epidemic.

"If you put yourself at risk, get yourself checked out when you get back," Burke said.

Students often do so much during spring break they wear themselves out and get sick afterward, Fink said.

"It's almost like you need a vacation from vacation," she said.

Fink said many students get ill and blame it on too much activity when, in reality, it could be the first symptom of a sexually transmitted disease.

"Have fun — but responsible fun," Fink said.

Wildcat soccer team tops WSU

Mohammed Saffarini, K-State center forward, battles for a loose ball against stopper Brent Carpani during the team's soccer practice Monday afternoon at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. Saffarini scored two of five goals during K-State's 5-0 win over Wichita State Sunday afternoon in Wichita.

K-State defense dominates in 5-0 shutout

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

The Wildcat lacrosse team was not the only team to break Wichita State's winning streak against K-State athletics last weekend.

K-State beat the Shocker lacrosse team Sunday afternoon, snapping the streak of Wichita State victories over the Wildcat men's basketball team, women's basketball team and baseball team.

But the K-State soccer shut out Wichita State 5-0, also on Sunday, in Wichita.

Halfback Frank Weeks said the defense did a good job.

"The defense pretty much shut down Wichita State," he said. "I think (goalie) Steve (Lauberth) stopped the ball maybe three times in the first half — he came off the field pretty bored."

Weeks said the team played extremely well for still being out of shape.

"We played great for the first 15 minutes but then our first guys got tired so we rotated players in every 15 to 20 minutes," he said. "That's why we did so well, because we had fresh legs in."

Center forward Mohammed Saffarini led the team in scoring with two goals. Left halfback Jason Bergman and right and left forwards Wayne Johnson and Jeff Sawarynski each added one.

Lauberth, the goalie credited with the shutout, said the defense made his job easy.

"I barely touched the ball," he said. "We haven't allowed a goal all season, and we can attribute that to the defense."

President Brent Carpani said the forwards had an excellent game.

"Wayne Johnson played great," he said. "He is usually a non-starter, but he has been playing well in practice. Jason Bergman also played well."

He said Johnson and Bergman are two players who do not get much playing time but proved themselves in the game.

Carpani was also impressed with the offense's performance.

"Sometimes we have a problem finishing the ball, but we just kept on attacking and attacking," Carpani said. "Usually we have to work to keep it to a 2-0 lead."

"But our offense was on the ball."

COLUMN

Next time, I'll bring more clothes

Who woulda thunk it?

Heck, I'll be the first to admit it — I thought I'd be coming home early from covering the Big Eight tournament.

Because my most recent exposure to Nebraska basketball had been an 80-59 smoking at Bramlage Coliseum, who would have thought that the Cats would have been playing for the Big Eight crown Sunday?

I didn't. And that's why I found myself wearing the same socks for three days and drying my hair from an air-conditioning duct in our hotel.

But it was a magical weekend for Wildcat hoops. Here's a day-by-day look:

■ FRIDAY — The only current K-State player to participate in the NCAA tournament ended up being the one to lead them back.

Askia Jones, who was only a freshman on the Wildcat's last NCAA tournament team, scored 19 points and hit the buzzer-beating bank shot to beat Nebraska, 47-45.

"It wasn't a pretty basketball game," Altman said. "But those are the ones we do a little better in."

What wasn't pretty was the game-winning play.

After a Nebraska foul gave the ball to the Cats with the shot clock off, guard Anthony Beane — the Sports Illustrated clutch player of the year — launched a high, arcing attempt from way beyond the three-point line with about eight seconds left.

"I was displeased with shot," Altman said. "Ski Jones was wide open on the wing. I thought he should have kicked it to him."

"He was right in front of us, and I told him to penetrate, and he pulled up a little deep."

About 25 feet deep.

"Anthony's been in that position before, and he's come through with shots like that. The young man's got a lot of confidence," Altman said.

Nebraska's Derrick Chandler grabbed Beane's miss, but Vincent Jackson tipped it away and shot a brick that was rebounded by Ski for the game-winner.

"I think Anthony knew all along Vincent was going to tip it up, take a bad shot, and we'd get it in," Altman dead-panned.

"The one thing about this team is that someone's always been able to rise to the occasion."

■ SATURDAY — "We've had them on the ropes a couple times," Altman said of the Jayhawks, Saturday's opponent. "But we've not been able to finish it."

"I told the players this morning that it was time to turn the tide."

Did it ever.

Paybacks are hell, and the Wildcats collected all their back interest in their scintillating, 74-67 comeback win.

"I've never had a team that lost its poise like that," said KU coach Roy Williams, who looked like he had just spent an hour in a sauna.

"When you can't dunk, you don't try to. We missed two dunks. We've got centers shooting the ball outside the foul line, we've got other centers shooting three-pointers on the break — it was just a total breakdown of our team."

In the KU locker room — a look of shock.

The Jayhawks mumbled their post-game comments, eyes glazed over. Towels covered some heads.

But probably the best moment of the day came in a media timeout with two minutes to go and the score tied.

Fans from seven of the eight schools smelled blood and joined in a K-State-led chant that rocked Kemper:

"K-S-U WILDCATS!"

K-State then iced the game with a little flash. With time running down, Jackson got the ball on a fast break and dished it with a behind-the-back pass to Aaron Collier for a dunk.

The play set off a spontaneous celebration on the K-State bench, including Altman, who hollered and pumped his fists.

Why have you been so much more excitable this year, Coach?

"I'm not sure," Altman said, looking at Jackson and Collier.

"I didn't realize I was that much more excited. Have I been much more excited, fellas?" Vincent and Aaron just smiled.

■ SUNDAY — After Saturday's win against KU, the championship game was almost anticlimactic.

Missouri wanted the NCAA tournament; the Wildcats wanted the hardware.

"Thanks for beating KU!" yelled one Tiger fan after Missouri's 68-56 win.

But the Cats' wounds were soothed a little when the NCAA brackets came out that night.

Tulane was a good draw for the Cats. The coaches were excited about the player match-ups. I think that Florida State in front of a home crowd in Orlando is probably another matter.

But I've been fooled before.

Wildcats to play 4th game of week

TROY COVERDALE
Collegian

Do three games in three days take a toll on a basketball player?

"You don't need rest at this time of the year," Wildcat coach Dana Altman said.

But take these numbers into account: Anthony Beane played more than 119 of a possible 120 minutes in the three Big Eight tournament games this weekend.

Vincent Jackson and Askia Jones each played 108. Deryl Cunningham played 102. Aaron Collier played 93.

K-State's top two subs, Brian Henson and Ron Lucas, played a combined total of just 68 minutes. Henson played 24 minutes in the whole tourney, including just four in the championship game Sunday afternoon.

By Sunday, the Cats had played in two tough games before facing Missouri for the title.

And the effects of all of those minutes played by K-State's starters showed as Mizzou wore down the Cats on their way to a 12-point win and the conference's automatic berth to the NCAA Tournament.

"It's the third game in three days," Altman said. "The adrenalin starts to flow, but we just looked a little sluggish at times."

The team took Monday off and will practice again Tuesday afternoon before traveling to Orlando, Fla., this evening.

"By Thursday, I don't think it will be a problem," Altman said. "That gives us three full days. We should be able to bounce back pretty quickly."

"We had guys playing 35-36 minutes for three straight games," he said. "We'll never have to do that again. That was just a one-time shot."

"And there's a level of excitement surrounding the NCAA that takes care of that fatigue."

The players were quick to blame themselves and not exhaustion for the loss.

"My legs felt kind of tired, but fatigue wasn't a big thing for this game," Vincent Jackson said. "They just outworked us."

"We've got a lot of fighters on this team, and I think if fatigue was a problem, they would have fought through it," Beane said. "I don't think fatigue was a problem. We played OK but just didn't play as hard."

After Lamont Frazier was called for an intentional foul on a forearm to Ski Jones' face, the Cats closed to within a point, but it proved to be the final charge for K-State as they missed three attempts at taking the lead.

"We tried to pick it up, and they picked it up another level," Jackson said. "We couldn't match it. My legs were feeling kind of tired."

Baseball Cats fall to Texas Tech

DEREK NELSON

FRESNO, Calif. — The Wildcats didn't get the key hit they needed Monday and lost 3-2 to Texas Tech Monday afternoon.

The Wildcats stranded five runners in the last four innings — four of those were in scoring position.

Trailing 2-0 in the sixth, the Wildcats, now 4-6, led off the inning with back-to-back singles by Jamey Stellino and Tim Decker. Chris Wolf then walked to load the bases. After Brian Culp struck out, Brian Morrow walked and scored Stellino.

Todd PETERING then walked to score Decker. Red Raider starter Travis Driskill was pulled in favor of Mike Copple, who struck out Chris Hess and forced Kevin McMullin to line to third to end the inning.

In the bottom of the sixth, Texas Tech's Saul Bustos blasted a solo home run to break the tie.

The Wildcats threatened again in the late innings but were never able to take full advantage of their situation.

"We put ourselves in a position to win this ballgame," Wildcat coach Mike Clark said. "We just could not come up with the hit to score the run."

The Red Raiders, 15-5, struck first when they rattled out seven hits and two runs in the first two innings.

"In the second, they didn't hit the ball hard, but they found the holes and we didn't," Clark said.

Texas Tech skipper Larry Hess said he agreed.

"We were lucky to place some hits out there and score early because their pitcher settled down and shut us down," Hess said. "He only made one mistake after the second inning and that was the home run."

Clark said he was not disappointed in the complete game effort by Driskill.

"This was a good outing for Dan," he said. "All we ask of our pitchers is to keep us in the ballgame, and Dan did that."

"I don't feel bad about anything he did today."

The Wildcats continue play in Fresno against Arizona today and Fresno State on Wednesday.

Decker was the only Wildcat who had two hits, both singles.

As a team, K-State finished with just six hits.

SPORTS DIGEST

► HIATT'S HOMER IN 5TH GIVES KC 2-1 VICTORY

DUNEDIN, Fla. (AP) — Phil Hiatt hit a solo homer, and Chris Haney pitched four scoreless innings as the Kansas City Royals defeated the Toronto Blue Jays 2-1 Monday.

Hiatt's homer in the fifth inning off Pat Hentgen broke a scoreless tie.

The Royals added an unearned run in the sixth to go ahead 2-0 before Ed Sprague's RBI single in the seventh gave Toronto its run.

Haney, obtained in an off-season trade with the Montreal Expos, gave up three hits and walked one to get the victory.

► WILDCATS SCHEDULED TO LEAVE AT 5 P.M.

The K-State basketball team will be leaving for Orlando, Fla., today about 5 p.m. A "send-off" party will be at the Manhattan Municipal Airport on Highway 18, and fans are urged to arrive at 4:30.

When the Wildcats returned home from the Big Eight tournament at Kemper Arena in Kansas City, Mo., more than 30 fans showed up to welcome home K-State's first NCAA Tournament team since 1990.

Cultural diversity targets children

KEVIN STRECKER

"The Color of Friendship" was the theme at Lee Elementary School Sunday.

The school had a multicultural fair in its gymnasium and displayed booths and entertainment focusing on many different cultures.

"Lee Elementary is made up of kindergarten through the sixth grade," Cindy Norris, fifth and sixth grade teacher, said. "It has the second highest population of minority students in the district."

Jan Gibbs, sixth-grade teacher, said she hopes the fair will continue.

"This was the first year for the fair, but we hope it will be an annual event," she said.

The fair was set up not only to educate the children but to create an awareness for others as well.

"We want to make other cultures more accepting to the kids," Norris said. "We are also trying to blend all various cultures histories into our teaching programs."

A committee, composed of USD 383 faculty, was organized to plan the event.

"The whole thing took between two and three months to plan,"

Gibbs said. "We have tried to get everyone involved and gave and received a lot of support."

The gymnasium was filled with visual displays and entertainment from all over the world.

Among the countries represented were Israel, Africa, Mexico, Taiwan, China and the Netherlands, Norris said.

"All of the work has been voluntary, and we have people actually from the country itself working the booths," Gibbs said. "Some of them are even parents of the kids here at Lee."

Norris said she has seen a good response to the fair.

"So far we have had a good turnout," Norris said. "The faculty, students, administrators and board of directors were all welcome."

"The food service at the school gave us a lot of support during the week," she said. "They served multicultural meals all during the week."

"The fair has been an experience for everyone involved in the fair," Norris said. "If any way possible, we would encourage other schools in the district to experiment with a similar program."

Marina to open for service May 1

Construction to begin with thaw, to provide boat rentals, fishing guides

RON LACKEY
Collegian

A long-awaited service will open on Tuttle Creek Reservoir this spring.

The Big Dawg Marina is scheduled to open May 1.

The marina will be owned and operated by Tuttle Creek Marina Inc. Vernon Dolezal is one of the partners in TCMI. He said his group saw a need for the marina three years ago.

"Tuttle is the second largest lake in the state, and it hasn't had a marina for seven years," Dolezal said.

"It will be convenient for the boaters in the Manhattan area because the lake is only four miles out of town."

Dolezal said the group hopes to draw visitors from a large area.

"We are going to try and draw people from northeast Kansas and southern Nebraska. For some people in Nebraska, this is the closest lake in the area," he said.

Construction of the marina will not take long, Dolezal said.

"Construction will start as soon as the ice is off the lake. The frames are already built. The contractor will take it out, insert the foam and drop the anchors. It should take about three weeks to complete. We plan to open on May 1, or as soon as the weather permits."

The location of the marina will be five miles north of the dam on the east side of the lake.

"There is a cove just north of the 'rocks' that will shelter the marina," Dolezal said.

The rocks is a popular student hangout during warm months.

"It will be like a very small convenience store. You can buy park permits, gasoline and food. You will be able to grab a sandwich and take it out to your boat. We also will have a sun deck," Dolezal said.

Keith Eyestone, another partner in Big Dawg Marina, said the facility will also provide slips for storing boats.

"We will have 36 slips at the start of the season," Eyestone said. "We can add on slips if they are needed, and we have covered and uncovered slips."

"Our season is eight months long, but winter dry-dock storage is also available."

The marina will provide many different services for the lake visitor. Jet ski rental, fishing boat and pontoon boat rental will be available. Other services include a tow service and fishing guides, Eyestone said.

Dolezal said there was a great amount of red tape involved in setting up the deal.

"We had to go through the park and recreation department in Pratt, and there was a lot of contract approval that we had to go through," he said.

"The Corp of Engineers was tough — sometimes we would have to go through three different people to get things approved."

LEGISLATION

Stephan opposes bill on courts

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Attorney General Bob Stephan plans to take the state to court if a bill allowing municipal courts to avoid notifying victims passes the Senate.

"I can see no way that a court would uphold this legislation," Stephan said in testimony Monday before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

He testified against a bill that would excuse municipal courts from notification of victims as required by the state constitution under an amendment approved by voters last November. The bill was unanimously approved in the House earlier this month.

Stephan rebuked the League of Kansas Municipalities and the House for passing the bill, which he called the most blatant special interest legislation he has seen.

Chris McKenzie, lobbyist for the league, said the burden of notification is too great on municipal courts and would force them to shuffle cases to the district courts — which still would be bound by the constitutional provision.

Sen. Mark Parkinson, R-Olathe, said intent of the bill was to prevent municipal courts from going through the hoops of victim

Rubble reveals victim of center's bombing

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — More than two weeks after a bomb ripped through the basement of the World Trade Center, authorities recovered a sixth body in the rubble Monday.

The victim was identified as Wilfredo Mercado, 37, a building worker who was last seen in the basement parking area where the bomb exploded Feb. 26. The first five victims were found within hours of the explosion at the 110-story twin towers.

Specially trained dogs had gone into the blast area eight times during the weekend searching for Mercado, an employee of the center's Vista Hotel.

Workers searching the debris in the underground parking garage first saw a boot sticking out of the debris and then dug up the body, said Mark Marchese, spokesman for the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey, which owns the complex.

Mercado's wife, Olga, has been notified, Marchese said. The couple have two children, Yvette, 10, and Heidy, 3.

Thousands of tons of rubble sit at the bottom of the huge bomb crater. The debris was being removed slowly, in shoebox-size containers, so federal agents could check it all for clues.

Three people have been arrested in the bombing, which injured more than 1,000 people. Published reports said authorities were looking for at least three more suspects.

Officials have not publicly identified one of the men sought by authorities. Newspapers identified him as an Egyptian immigrant who moved to Jersey City after leaving Brooklyn.

Australian Chamber Orchestra
Daniel McKelway, clarinet soloist
Wednesday, March 17, 8 p.m.

No, there won't be any kangaroos, and Crocodile Dundee won't make a guest appearance. But when the Australian Chamber Orchestra comes to McCain, you'll get a chance to experience what The Bulletin with Newsweek (Australia) calls "a stratospheric standard" in classical music.

The group, led by hyper-talented young Aussie director, Richard Tognetti at lead violin, will perform works by Mozart, Haydn, Bartók and Weber.

Joining the ACO is clarinet soloist, Daniel McKelway. The Seattle Post-Intelligencer characterized his style as "like a trapeze artist, stunning us with his risky tricks and persuading us by his poetry."

Don't miss this performance by the finest young musicians Australia has to offer.

notification when the victims do not care.

But Sen. Pat Ranson, R-Wichita, said Wichita has a domestic violence ordinance so such cases go through municipal court, and those victims deserve notification.

Paul Morrison, Johnson County district attorney, said he agreed and testified against the bill because it allows cities to opt out of notifying victims.

"I don't think anybody expects municipal courts to send out notification in traffic offenses," Morrison said.

He suggested the committee amend the bill to require municipal courts to notify victims in cases of crimes against persons and family relations and for sex offenders.

Committee Chairman Jerry

Moran, R-Hays, assigned the bill to a criminal law subcommittee for further work.

In other action, the committee favorably approved a bill that would require victims to be notified in the case of death or escape of offenders.

Wyandotte County District Attorney Nick Tomic said the committee to approve a bill permitting victims and their families to attend juvenile court proceedings.

"I've been in this business 20 years and we're not dealing with truants and runaways anymore. We're dealing with murderers, rapists and robbers — mean kids," he said.

Tomic said if the victims and their families are not allowed in the proceedings, they may never know what happened.

Chinese enjoy respect given by Americans

Chinese students mostly study science, engineering and agriculture because of the difficulty in mastering the English language, he said.

"It's kind of more difficult to study, for example, journalism. The language is so difficult," he said.

Even though the language is difficult to adapt to, the weather doesn't seem to cause problems.

The weather at K-State is not a serious problem for Chinese students, though it is sometimes worse than China, but we can learn how to cope, Xu said.

Most Chinese students come to K-State by taking the graduate record examination or to join their spouses studying here.

Guo said she came both to study and to join her husband.

She said the faculty members and students at K-State treat Chinese students with a high degree of respect.

"Every faculty member treats every Chinese very nice and kind. Also American students," she said.

Guo said she feels comfortable here but does miss the traditional Chinese foods. Most dishes she is used to are not available here.

"I'm happy here except for the food," she said.

However, Xi said he can get the Chinese foods he likes from the international stores. One problem is students must know how to prepare the Chinese dishes.

Xi said he gets a taste of home by preparing his own Chinese dishes.

"We cook ourselves. We just buy food from international stores and prepare it our traditional way."

Students produce local newscast

MICHELLE HAUPT

Collegian

Lacking experience but not expertise, the production crew for News 21 is getting hands-on training behind the cameras.

"Most of them are rookies, but they've been doing a good job," Jeff Neal-Lunsford, instructor of journalism and mass communications, said.

He said the weekly student-run broadcast has been doing well and is extremely pleased with the professionalism in the program. However, few students in the production crew have had much live-TV background.

"Some have had Video I and II — half are just now in Video I," he said.

Neal-Lunsford said he has done many newscasts and been on both sides of the camera. He said they could tape it so the students wouldn't be as nervous, but there would be a temptation to edit later.

"In the real world, news is live," he said. "If you make a mistake, everyone knows about it. That's the news."

Although a quality program is the desired result, Neal-Lunsford said the goal is for students to learn every aspect of production, from directing to camera operation.

"We want this to be as educational as possible," he said. "People rotate around and change positions from week to week."

Debby Miller, senior in radio and television, is a member of the News 21 production crew. She said she liked the professional atmosphere, but the broadcast had a slow start.

"The first time both classes met, we had to understand each other's strengths and weaknesses," Miller said. "After a few shows, we're blending well and moving more smoothly as it goes by."

She said she liked the program because the students were in charge.

"It's our project, and the instructors stay back as much as possible," she said. "It's kind of exciting and scary at the same time."

Miller said she has gained valuable experience from it.

"I learned you need to be patient," she said. "Sometimes it's hard to do in stressful situations. You learn how to work with people and get the best out of everybody."

"It's a wonderful opportunity," she said.

Young driver bill opposed in rural areas

But Rep. Gene Shore, R-Johnson, who called himself the lead dog for making sure the bill does not pass, said residents of his rural district did not support the bill. He said their children would not be able to participate in school-related activities if they could not drive to school.

Many children in Shore's district travel as far as 20 miles to attend school, and the schools cannot afford to provide extra busing to and from activities, he said.

Kyle Bauer, another opponent of the bill who lives outside Clay Center, suggested better enforcement of driving laws or an increased fine for offenders instead of raising the legal age for drivers.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

DEAR CASSANDRA, This is a different letter than you are used to because it is a "Thank you" letter. I wish to thank an instructor. You say, "What is so different about that?"

I have never met this instructor, but he has helped me and taught me more than any one single person has ever before. He did not help me out of a jam or extend any kindness. Quite the opposite. This instructor is the most negative person I have ever seen.

Around campus I have noticed him dealing with staff and workers at the various workplaces. He is very harsh and makes everyone around him as miserable as he is. He acts as if the entire world is out to get him and he is owed some great reward for his sacrifices.

No character in any book has conveyed the message more clearly or more precisely as this person has done. He is the one who is making himself unhappy.

I look at this person, and I see what I do not ever want to become. I am not a religious person by any means. But I have hope, and laughter, and happiness and love in my life because I have welcomed it. My daddy says, "You can learn something from everyone." I have never found this to be more true than now.

So, I send a "Thank you" to this instructor who has unwittingly taught me a great lesson: You are what you make of yourself.

Sincerely,

DEAR RR,

Certainly an unusual letter. You bring up an important point, however. We can all learn from others, even (and sometimes especially) from people who are not far from being role models.

Perhaps the instructor you mention, and anyone else like him, will see himself and want to change.

Senate grants funds

MICHELLE ROGERS
Collegian

Allocations to groups on campus began for Student Senate Tuesday night.

Four of the five groups considered for allocations were funded, while the allocations for the final group are postponed until there is proper representation from the group leaders.

Women's Resource Center, an educational program that promotes the personal and academic well-being of K-State students was the first group to receive allocations in Tuesday's meeting.

The allocations for the Women's Resource Center totaled $1,214.25. Fifty eight dollars was allocated for postage, $200 for honorariums or speakers and $956.25 for one work study student at $4.25 an hour for thirty weeks.

Consumer Relations Board allocations totaling $4,818.40 also were passed.

CRB is a social service designed to advise and assist students with any type of consumer problem.

The allocations for CRB were $302.40 for advertising, which is equal to eight advertisements in the Collegian, $44 for printing of 250 business cards, $127 for dues and membership in the American Council for Consumer Interests and a subscription to Consumer Reports, $25 for pamphlets and $4,320 for director salaries.

Hispanic American Leadership Organization approached Senate with two projects for the year, each were passed. The total allocations equaled $1,715.65.

For project one, Hispanic Awareness Month, allocations were $24 for advertising, $10.15 for postage, $100 for printing of flyers and posters to promote Hispanic Awareness Month, $10 for telephone calls and $1,000 for honorariums.

For project two, National Hispanic Leadership Conference in Chicago, allocations were $5 for telephone calls, $364 for travel, $90 for food, and $112.50 for lodging.

Allocations for Students Acting to Save a Vulnerable Environment were postponed because of a lack of SAVE representation at the meeting. These will be addressed in the March 30 meeting.

Alpha Phi Omega, an organization that assembles college students in a National Service Fraternity in the fellowship of the principles of the Boy Scouts of America as embodied in the Scout Oath and Law, received allocations totaling $52.

The allocations include two projects. Project one, to clean and maintain information boards, was allocated $5 for printing information flyers and $20 for supplies.

A membership drive was allocated $24 for advertising and $3 for printing.

Classical music invades Aggieville

Speakers on light poles attempt to improve security in 'Ville

BRYAN LARSON
Collegian

Anyone traveling to Aggieville in the near future can expect to hear a dose of classical music.

The music will not be coming from a new bar or from a band playing in triangle park. Instead, it will emanate from speakers hung on light poles and will probably play until 3 a.m.

Cheryl Sieben, director of the Aggieville Business Association, said the speakers are an attempt to improve security in the district.

The idea is the classical music will discourage people from loitering or gathering into large crowds anywhere in Aggieville.

Police also will be able to make announcements on the speakers.

"I know it sounds crazy, but it has worked in Westport and other areas. The music affects your mood," Sieben said. Westport is an entertainment district in the Kansas City area.

Twenty-two members of the business association got together and put down an initial investment of $10,000 for the speakers, Sieben said.

"For now, the speakers are all paid for, but in the future we will have ASCAP/BMI fees and other expenses to take care of. We hope to be able to take care of these by running advertisements."

The speakers will not be put in place until they are approved by the city commission.

In a commission meeting Tuesday afternoon, commissioners decided to postpone a final decision on the speakers in order to work on the proper wording for the proposal.

The general consensus of the commissioners seemed to be in favor of the speakers.

"This is something that these people have put a lot of work in on and have given a lot of thought to. I don't foresee any serious problems with the idea," Commissioner Gene Klingler said.

Several members of the business association attended the meeting and commented on the speakers.

"Members of the association got together to discuss ways to alleviate security problems, on the heels of the stabbing of a former football player in an incident last spring," Bob Cook, regional director of Hardee's, said.

"Several ideas were discussed. The speakers seemed to be the most feasible."

The association contacted Dean Zagortz, a K-State graduate. Zagortz works for Superior Security and Controls in Kansas City, and was involved with installing similar speakers in Westport.

"We drew up several plans and came up with one in which we will install nine speakers throughout Aggieville with the main controls being located in a centralized location," he said.

Zagortz said police officers working the area will have access to make announcements over the speakers if a disturbance occurs.

"The officer will only have to carry a small portable microphone. Hopefully this will be the only baton that is used."

"Putting up speakers was very effective in Westport. Merchants noticed an almost immediate effect," Zagortz said.

The speakers are on order and are awaiting only the commission's approval, Sieben said.

"We were hoping to have them up by Saturday for the St. Patrick's festivities, but we hope to have them up soon. If we had been able to have them up by then we could have possibly played Irish music on them," she said.

LIVING HIS DREAM

Student from Russia enjoys new experiences in college life

DAVID GROSKO
Collegian

The more things change, the more they stay the same.

This is the case for George Zikratov, graduate student in chemistry, who transferred from St. Petersburg University in Russia.

"I had always dreamed of studying somewhere other than Russia," Zikratov said. "My dream was fulfilled when I was accepted at K-State."

He was initially overwhelmed last July when arriving in the United States after spending two days in New York, he said.

"New York is a crazy place. I was wondering how big of a mistake I had made coming to the United States," he said.

"I like Kansas much, much better."

He said stereotypes about both Russia and the United States are not exactly correct, but college students in general are the same.

"There are some students who take school very serious, yet some who just have a lot of fun," Zikratov said.

People still have the same typical characteristics and think the same, he said.

"After big exams, Russian students, like American students, enjoy going to the bars," he said. "It is a good way to relax and unwind."

While some things are the same, there are also many differences in the two cultures.

"I don't understand why a person would pay to go to school and not study. Students in Russia are concerned about knowledge and understanding. American students seem like they just want to get by," Zikratov said.

"School is free in Russia. People go to school because they like it and have a desire for knowledge."

He said school was harder or more intense in Russia. This was because almost all students must have a full-time job in addition to going to school.

"It is almost impossible to survive in Russia without working. Students here have more free time, and I really like that," he said.

Education in Russia is more theoretical than practical, Zikratov said. He said he likes his classes at K-State because he is learning more practical skills.

"Practical skills are not stressed as much in Russia," he said. "I guess that is important to employers in the United States."

Zikratov said textbooks for science, such as physics and chemistry, and history fields are handed down. There is no selling and buying of these books, because these fields have stayed the same for years.

The accessibility of computers and service at libraries is much better at

NEWS DIGEST

► VOTE FALLS SHORT OF ENDING FILIBUSTER

WASHINGTON — The Senate failed by a single vote Tuesday to muster the votes needed to cut short a filibuster barring passage of bill making voter registration easier.

The 59-41 vote failed one short of the 60 needed to end a filibuster.

Senate Majority Leader George

Mitchell of Maine said a second attempt to limit debate on the bill will take place Wednesday morning.

The vote came moments after Mitchell accused Senate Republicans of perpetuating legislative "gridlock" by repeated stalling and delays.

► DEADLINE FOR CANDIDATES APPROACHING

STEPHANIE FUQUA
Collegian

The deadline is fast approaching for students who wish to run for Student Senate, Board of Student Publications, student body president and vice president, and Union Governing Board.

Election filing forms must be filed by 5 p.m. Tuesday, March 30.

To be eligible for Senate and the Board of Student Publications, students must either be full-time students or graduate students with at least 6 hours, except for those graduating in the spring, summer or fall of the term they are elected.

Students interested in Union Governing Board must be full-time undergraduate students enrolled in 12 hours, having already completed 12 hours and having a minimum grade point average of 2.5, or they must be graduate students.

The maximum amount these students may spend on their campaigns is $72.80.

Candidates for student body president and vice-president must be full-time students and not graduate during the spring, summer or fall of the term they are elected.

The maximum amount candidates for president and vice president may spend is $728 for the general election and $182 for the run-off election.

A mandatory candidate information session will take place April 2 to discuss campaign regulations and draw ballot positions.

Filing applications are available in the Student Governing Association office on the first floor in the K-State Union.

ON THE AGENDA

Volunteers to boost cultural awareness

KRISTI HUMSTON
Collegian

While many students will travel to other states during spring break, others will stay in Kansas and have an opportunity see a pow wow or a rattlesnake show.

The Community Service Program is offering alternative spring break projects for students interested in assisting one of two rural Kansas communities.

Fifteen students will travel to the Kickapoo Indian Reservation for three days and will help restore the pow wow grounds and tribal park, reconstruct playground equipment and paint buildings.

Students will help produce a documentary movie while working on the project to help promote cultural awareness through community service. It will be shown on campus in April.

Students will have the opportunity to attend a pow wow and to interact with the Kickapoo people while staying on the reservation.

Eight students will visit Sharon Springs for five days to assist the community in renovating a gas station into a teen center. The students will stay with host families and will have an opportunity to attend a casino night and rattlesnake show.

Timm Walker, senior in computer and electrical engineering, is one of the students planning to visit Sharon Springs.

Walker said he got involved with the Community Service Program after seeing posters on campus last spring.

"I thought it would be a pretty fun thing to do," he said.

Last year, Walker spent some of his spring break volunteering at a thrift store in Clay Center.

"I had a lot of fun last time and met some neat people," he said.

This was why he decided to get involved during spring break this year, he said.

Walker said he enjoys getting to know others on the outreach teams and in the communities. For this reason, he said he plans to participate in a couple more activities before graduating in May.

Jeff Rathlef, student coordinator of the Students in Action and Volunteer Efforts program and a senior in history, has been involved with the Community Service Program for 1 1/2 years.

"I enjoy seeing the interaction between the communities and the students," Rathlef said.

He said interaction helps both parties become aware of current issues and concerns.

While both of the alternative spring break service projects are full, two volunteer opportunities still exist yet this spring. On April 10 and 15 students are needed to help paint a two-story house and will tour the Kansas Landscape Arboretum.

On May 1, 2 and 12 students are needed to help restore the historic Thomas Barn in Stockton. Volunteers will work with local 4-H groups.

Rathlef said no skills are required to get involved with the service projects.

"All of the skills needed are basic and can be shown in a small amount of time," he said.

The Community Service Program provides transportation and makes sure the communities match the efforts of the volunteers.

"The purpose of the program is to help people help themselves."

Rodney King, race and rights REVISITED

Story by Mark Jones

Photos by Cary Conover

More than 30 students and faculty members gathered Tuesday in the Union Big 8 Room to vent frustrations and ask questions about the Rodney King civil rights case.

Allison Mahoney, student organizer of the forum, said she thinks the case will bring about some changes.

"The Rodney King case will set the pace for racial relations in the future," Mahoney said.

Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, said the forum aimed to answer questions pertaining to the civil rights case, hear concerns before a verdict is reached and learn how the case relates to Manhattan.

Questions about the case and its proceedings were answered by lawyers Danielle Dempsey, assistant director of affirmative action, and Beverly McLean-Murray, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications.

The questions focused on the differences between civil and criminal cases and the procedures that are being followed.

The King civil rights case is a civil trial. Because of this, there are different sanctions that may be imposed, Murray said.

Though some California laws are different than federal laws, the case is a federal case and follows federal law, she said.

The reason for the King civil rights case was also explained.

The first trial was for using excessive force and beating someone, but this case is different. They're not prosecuting a beating but an action done because of who someone is," Dempsey said.

Franklin said the forum setting is effective because it gives people a place to vent their frustrations and learn what is going on.

The forum was sponsored by the dean of student life office, the assistant provost for multicultural affairs and Delta Upsilon.

▲ Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, listens to Beverly Murray, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, and Danielle Dempsey, assistant director of Affirmative Action, as they field questions from the audience.

▲ Judy Davis, director of the Women's Resource Center, leans over to get a better view of a person responding to one of the questions asked during the Rodney King forum Tuesday afternoon in the K-State Union Big Eight Room.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Bill would mean more voters

THE ISSUE

In the past, Student Government elections have had low voter turnout.

WE SUGGEST

Student Senate should pass a bill that would make it more convenient for students to vote.

Students are always complaining about how Student Senate is not responsive to their needs and doesn't listen to them. Well, here is a chance for that to change.

A bill will come before Senate Thursday that would allow students to vote in their colleges instead of in the K-State Union.

Education students will be able to vote in Bluemont; business students in Calvin; engineering in Durland; arts and sciences in Eisenhower; human ecology in Justin; architecture in Seaton; animal science students in Waters; veterinary-medicine students in the Veterinary Medicine Complex and graduate students in the Union.

Because students may only vote within their college, this distribution plan works to centralize the voting opportunity for students. On the whole, students are more likely to spend time in their college building than in the Union.

Out of 20,000 K-State students, only 4,775 people voted in the 1991 election. That is pathetic. If passed, the multiple polling places could only increase voter turnout.

Then students wouldn't have an excuse for not voting. They can go to classes on election day, stop by the voting booth and cast their ballots.

Granted, this will mean a bit more work for the Senate Elections Committee, but it will be serving a fundamental need for the student body. That is something all senators should strive for.

So, listen up, senators. Think about the needs of the students and pass this bill.

Two presidents sound the call for leadership service

I write to challenge you to join me in a great American adventure — national service.

I make this challenge because our country and our communities need help that government alone cannot provide. Government can make vaccines available to children, but alone it cannot administer shots to them all. It can put more police on the streets, but alone it cannot stop crime. It can improve the quality of our public schools, but cannot alone inspire children to live up to their potential.

It is time for Americans of every background to work together to lift our country up, neighborhood by neighborhood and block by block. It is time to rediscover the excitement and idealism that makes us Americans.

This is what national service is all about.

Through national service, thousands will have the opportunity to pay for college by rebuilding their communities — serving as teachers, police officers, health-care workers and in other capacities. But it will take time for these ideas to pass Congress and time to implement them. We must start now.

That is why I have called for a Summer of Service — this summer. More than 1,000 young people will serve in selected areas around the country, learning to lead and getting children who are at risk ready for school.

There are many who believe young Americans will not answer a call to action. They say you are apathetic, and insist that you measure your success in the accumulation of material things. I know they are wrong, and I know you will answer this challenge.

You can become an agent of renewal — either through the summer program or on your own. Write and tell me what you are doing, or what you want to do:

The White House — National Service Washington, D.C. 20500

Your efforts and your energies can lift the spirits of our nation and inspire the world. Please answer the call.

As president of Union Governing Board, I am pleased to offer you an exciting, unique leadership opportunity — UGB student membership. Six new UGB student members will be elected during the April 13-14, 1993 Student Government Elections.

Because many of you may be unfamiliar with UGB, I will provide some general information.

UGB is the governing and policy-making body of the K-State Union. UGB's responsibilities include: 1) Developing and evaluating Union policies, 2) developing and evaluating capital improvement recommendations, 3) regularly reviewing Union operations, and 4) reviewing and approving the Union's budget.

BRAD BRENNEMAN

UGB is comprised of eight voting student members, one voting Student Senate representative, one voting Student Alumni Board representative, two voting faculty representatives, one voting Faculty Senate representative, and four non-voting Union personnel.

This is only the most basic information about UGB. If you desire additional information, please attend the UGB Information Session at 7 p.m. Tuesday, March 16, in the Union Big 8 Room, or contact me at 537-1979.

If you desire to file for election, please complete a filing packet immediately. Filing packets are available in the Student Government Office or the Union Director's Office (2nd floor of the Union). The filing deadline is Tuesday, March 30.

Clearly, UGB promises excellent leadership opportunities. I hope each of you seriously considers these opportunities.

Thank you for your consideration.

Brad Brenneman, senior in accounting, is the 1992-93 president of Union Governing Board.

BILL CLINTON

OTHER VIEWS

The Morning News Tribune, Tacoma, Wash., on national service (March 8):

Bill Clinton's national service corps is a wonderful idea. Whether it would be an equally wonderful federal program depends on a good many details that apparently haven't been worked out yet.

As outlined by the president ..., the corps would permit young Americans to serve their communities in exchange for federal college assistance. Students would tutor children in the public schools, help immunize 2-year-olds, assist in anti-pollution efforts or even join a Police Corps and walk beats in crime-ridden neighborhoods. In return, they would receive financial support for education or training. ...

With tuitions rising, many young Americans are being priced out of a college education. Yet, America needs a highly trained and educated work force to compete in the world economy. And the country's overburdened schools, police departments and public health clinics are certainly in need of reinforcements. A national service corps could kill all these birds with one stone. ...

Congress would be wiser to implement the concept more carefully, giving it a longer test run as a pilot project, working out any problems before its annual budget hits the 10-digit-number range. A national service corps is a genuinely promising idea. Adopted too hastily, though, it could as easily turn into a boondoggle as a blessing.

ABORTION

Union table remains unnecessarily graphic

Editor,

I am getting so sick of walking by the Right to Life table as I am trying to enter the K-State Union Stateroom to eat. I realize this is a free speech zone and that they feel they have justification showing dead babies on television.

It is nice to know we have a group that can remind women, who for whatever reason have chosen to abort a child, what that child looked like. Perhaps right-to-lifers ought to stand outside abortion clinics with see-through urns so that women can start putting the aborted fetuses on the mantel, like they might a dead relative.

I am not advocating abortion, nor do I know what I would do if I were faced with an unwanted pregnancy (my decision might be easier than others since my child-bearing years are limited, if nonexistent).

However, I think my higher power that if I do "have" to abort, it is my choice. Women have a helluva tough job just being in this free society. Let us be. Hand out your pamphlets, educate, but just say no to dead-baby television.

EVOLUTION

Sorry John, but even you have evolved

Editor,

Recently, John Hart wrote a column titled "Evolution plagued by dogma." In his column, he states that evolution is a "theory" and "can be treated as fact, but only as an exercise of faith." Hart would be well-advised to examine the volumes of evidence invoking evolution as the explanation for the diversity of life.

Evolution proceeds by natural selection, acting upon the genetic variation inherent in all populations of organisms. For example, through agronomic practices, humans impose selection pressure on plant and animal species to adapt to a modified environment. Soviet botanists discovered that populations of camelina (a weedy plant species) strongly mimic flax. This adaptation has enabled the weed to not be rogued out of the flax fields. In addition, weeds have evolved resistance to herbicides.

Hart, you are also a product of evolution. You have adapted to an environment much different from your ancestors. Modern day conveniences have made your life much easier. If these comforts were suddenly taken away, you would have to adapt to a harsher lifestyle or perish.

Evolutionary biologists are constantly under attack by creationists. The concept of evolution was developed not to discredit creationism or validate atheism, but to provide a tenable explanation for the diversity of life on this planet.

Unlike creationism, evolution is based on fact and not on faith. It is a pity that you may never see the beauty, truth and ethic involved in the study of evolution. There is no other path for an evolutionist to travel. You are here for an education, not another tired exercise in fantasy.

STRAIGHTS

America is no Utopian society for anyone

Editor,

I would like to comment on the newsletter put out by Students Trying to Remember America Isn't a Giant Homosexual Utopian Society or STRAIGHTS. First off, America is not a "giant utopian society" for homosexuals, unless you call living with fear, discrimination, and oppression a utopian society. And what utopian society practices ignorance and hatred towards its members? STRAIGHTS must have a very different definition of utopia. A gay must live with the threat of being brutally beaten, sometimes to the point of death. And for what? For being gay? Some utopia.

Then STRAIGHTS goes on to feature "in-ing," which is opposite of "outing." STRAIGHTS calls outing a "giant step backward in the fight for equality." What's the point of STRAIGHTS "in-ing" someone? Will that heterosexual face the possibility of losing their job? Their freedom? Medical insurance?

I do not condone "outing," but I think I understand where they are coming from and where they hope to go. There are some people who are in a position to act on behalf of gay rights, (not special rights, human rights), and they don't. Also, if Joe and Jane Public had any ideas just how many men and women are gay or bisexual, they would be very surprised indeed. It's not as much fun to bash someone you love. Your fathers, brothers, sisters, and yes, grandparents may be closeted. Not to mention close friends.

STRAIGHTS asks you to think STRAIGHT thoughts and remember America is still number one. Let's try to think in terms of the global village rather than the mentality of "we are better than you."

Bill would establish base budget for regents schools

K-State would receive $75.3 million in fiscal year 1995, $76.1 million in 1996 and $76.9 million in 1997 under the proposed bill.

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The House Appropriations Committee agreed Tuesday to introduce a bill proposed by its leader, Rep. Rochelle Chronister, that would create a new method of funding for the state's six universities.

The bill, designed to stabilize financial sources for the universities and permit better long-range planning, will be referred back to the committee for review.

It would establish a base budget for each of the schools and then "guarantee" a certain percentage of increase from the state general fund during a three-year period, starting with fiscal year 1995 and running through fiscal 1997.

The universities' budgets for fiscal year 1994, which begins July 1, are already working their way through the Legislature this session and would not be affected.

The bill would eliminate the present funding formula, with exceptions for annual percentage adjustments to fund classified employees' pay raises, adjustments for fringe benefit changes and servicing of new buildings.

Under the plan, universities would be allowed to retain the revenue they raise from student tuition, except for 20 percent, which would go to the Board of Regents for a faculty salary enhancement fund. That money would be used to raise faculty salaries to 95 percent of their peer institutions.

The new financing plan would apply to the University of Kansas, K-State, Wichita State, Emporia State, Fort Hays State and Pittsburg State.

It would not apply to the University of Kansas Medical Center, Kansas State University Veterinary Medical Center, KSU's College of Technology at Salina or the KSU extension service.

The bill would provide these amounts of money for the universities from the state general fund for fiscal 1995 through fiscal 1997:

■ KU: $105.2 million; $106.3 million; $107.4 million.
 ■ KSU: $75.3 million; $76.1 million; $76.9 million.
 ■ WSU: $51.2 million; $51.7 million; $52.3 million.
 ■ ESU: $22.2 million; $22.4 million; $22.7 million.
 ■ FHSU: $22.6 million; $22.9 million; $23.1 million.
 ■ PSU: $23.1 million; $23.4 million; $23.6 million.

Gay ban panel draws crowd

Lifting of ban won't change if gays come out, panelists said

CORI CORNELISON

Collegian

A panel discussion on gays in the military didn't spark much controversy Tuesday night in K-State Union's Forum Hall.

The discussion was mostly targeted toward society's lack of understanding of homosexuals and how education can be a big factor in overcoming sexual discrimination.

About 40 people attended. Four panelists answered questions from moderator John Robertson, psychologist for University Counseling Services, and other audience members.

Captain Allen West, assistant professor of military science; Judy Davis, director of Women's Resource Center; Walter Schumm, professor of human development; and Kent Donovan, BaGaLS adviser, served as panel members.

Donovan said at present, most homosexual people have not openly come out. When and if the ban is lifted, this is not going to change, he said.

"The armed forces are already full of homosexuals right now," Donovan said.

Homosexuals are sensitive and hesitant to come out in a hostile environment; however, more and more homosexual people today are coming out than ever before, Donovan said.

"The taboo against homosexuals is weakening and continues to," he said.

Some audience members concerns focused on blood transfusions during combat. Soldiers could face a bigger risk of contracting AIDS without proper processing of blood before transfusions.

AIDS can go undetected for five to seven years before the virus shows up in tests.

Davis said the problem with our society is we have a fear born of ignorance. She said the challenge for us is to do what we can with open discussions and understanding.

West said he believes education is the key to solving the sexual discrimination of gays, along with allowing leaders to deal with the problem first. Risks must be taken, he said. Military commanders should be the ones handling the issue of gays in the military and not the public, West said.

"It's going to take people not wearing uniforms to lay off of it and let us work it out," West said.

A question was raised about the cost of arrangements to provide for homosexuals. West said right now, the military has not made any decisions as to exactly what changes will occur, but he said if there are changes the taxpayers will end up paying.

Donovan said he believes most of the cost should be for education. Getting rid of the discrimination through education is more important than segregation, he said.

"I don't find it ne-cessary to build separate barracks for homosexuals," Donovan said.

West used the army's motto to support his opinion that the military can overcome any problem they face.

"No mission too difficult, no sacrifice too great, duty first."

Alcohol safety considerations important for safe vacation

KRISTI HUMSTON
Collegian

When it comes to alcohol and other drugs, it is important to take safety factors into consideration.

Bill Arck, director of KSU Alcohol and Other Drug Education Service, said it is important for individuals to know their limit and to set a limit for how much to drink prior to drinking.

"It is your body and it's your life," Arck said. "You have to decide what chemicals you put into it."

Tony Gooden, owner of Kickers Bar and Grill, said to drink in moderation, use common sense on what alcohol can do and know the consequences it can have.

Gooden said he considers responsible drinking to be a couple of beers.

"If you have any more than that, you are at risk," he said.

Before drinking, it is wise to have someone volunteer to be the designated driver. Designated drivers should be people who are not drinking at all — not the individuals who are drinking the least.

"Someone in the group needs to say, 'One of us is not going to drink,'" Gooden said.

Arck said he feels it is a great asset to have someone in a group who chooses not to drink and who can help others make responsible choices.

Because of dehydration, Arck said, drinking makes one more susceptible to sunshine and ultraviolet rays and decreases one's inhibitions.

Monitoring drinking and eating something beforehand are ways to combat alcohol-related problems. However, for individuals who realize it's too late to avoid problems, Arck provided some tips.

When someone passes out, which basically means they go to sleep from consuming too much too quickly, it is important to have someone monitor the individual. Do not give the person other drugs, including coffee, to help them out.

"The only way to sober up is with time and plenty of water," Arck said. "It's going to take time — that's all there is to it."

If the individual is beyond control, one should get emergency help.

For students who choose not to drink excessively, Arck said he sees some benefits.

"If you don't get drunk, you won't be hung-over or sick the next day. It's a great asset to wake up fresh-eyed and go for a walk on the beach."

It takes approximately one hour per drink to get the drug out of your system. The effect on the brain, depending on a person's size, can last up to 36 hours.

Arck said it has been three years since a K-State student has been involved in a spring-break accident.

"I hope students continue to watch out for one another, themselves and other people on the road," Arck said.

Fans give big send-off

WADE SISSON
Collegian

More than 100 fans braved cold winds Tuesday afternoon to give the Orlando-bound Wildcats a proper send-off.

The farewell began in the west parking lot of Bramlage Coliseum, where KMKF-FM 101.5 and KMAN-AM 1350 asked Wildcat fans to gather at 3:30 p.m. to cheer for the basketball team.

"We just want to tell the team we love them and that they earned our respect this year," Jason Wright, K-Rock program director, said.

"This year the team really has a lot of heart. They may have been down by 10 points, but they just didn't quit, ever," he said.

Fans sought shelter in their cars as they awaited the team's departure.

"They should've let class out for this," Kelly Kusel, sophomore in agricultural economics, said.

Kusel said he thinks supporting the athletes is important and was at Bramlage to greet the team after the game against the University of Oklahoma.

"They got off the bus and had this funny look on their faces like what the heck are you doing here," he said. "It was great."

Young children, K-State students and Manhattan residents were all on hand to show their purple pride.

"We're pretty loyal fans," Kathy Herde, Manhattan resident, said. "We bleed purple. If they go to New Orleans, we'll be there."

Many fans said they felt obligated to give the team a send-off because they cannot go to Orlando for the NCAA tournament.

"I haven't missed a game this year," Terri Detter, senior in computer science and math, said. "I have to be here since I can't be in Orlando."

As members of the K-State Marching Band played, the team appeared at 4:20 p.m., in a motorcade of seven vehicles.

Fans rushed to form a line around the cars, shaking the outstretched hands of the players.

Wild cheering and horn-honking erupted as the parade of cars crept slowly past the crowd.

Many fans followed the motorcade to Manhattan Municipal Airport, where the team boarded a private airplane for Kansas City.

The plane departed at 5 p.m. Student Body President Jackie McClaskey and members of the marching band joined the team on the trip to Orlando.

Team members waved from windows aboard the plane to the large crowd dominated by homemade posters and a purple flag.

"We were so excited we didn't know what we were going to do, but we have to be there whatever it is," Lori Gauntt, Manhattan resident, said.

Jones shrugs off jaw injury in practice

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

Before K-State's departure to Orlando, Fla., for their first-round NCAA tournament game, the team got in a quick hour of practice in Bramlage Coliseum yesterday — their first since returning from the Big Eight tournament.

"Show 'em that purple Thursday!" the coaches hollered during warm-up drills. "It's a chance to get 20 (wins). Show off the Big Eight!"

But there was some doubt if guard Askia Jones would show.

"I'm not sure if he's going to practice or not today," head coach Dana Altman said.

Jones did join the team for warmups a few minutes later, running his tongue over a clear plastic retainer he wore to protect a jaw injury he suffered in the Big Eight Championship game.

Jones, who averaged 15.3 points during the weekend tournament, was hit by an elbow Sunday from Missouri's LaMont Frazier in the second half. Frazier was given an intentional foul.

"(Frazier's elbow) was uncalled for," Jones said later through swollen lips.

After the conclusion of the game, Jones was taken to a dentist, who straightened four teeth and put in five stitches in the inside of his bottom lip.

"I haven't eaten that much — it's hard to eat," he said.

"The bottom four teeth are still loose. They had to put the braces on to keep them stable."

Jones will wear the braces for a minimum of six weeks and is using an antibiotic mouthwash to prevent infection.

But the chances of losing any of his teeth after the injury is not a big worry — right now.

"If I don't get hit again."

Tulane looks to end slump against Cats

K-State's first round opponent started hot, but cooled off late in the regular season

STEVEN ROCK

ORLANDO, Fla. — The Green Wave — it's not just another Stephen King book adapted into a shoddy major motion picture.

The NCAA Tournament-bound K-State Wildcats will meet the Tulane Green Wave Thursday afternoon at 1:45 in Orlando, Fla.

Tulane, a school in New Orleans with an enrollment of less than 12,000, comes into the Southeast regional first-round game with a 21-8 record.

Tulane finished the season 9-3 and in second place in the Metro Conference. This is the second-straight trip to the Dance for Tulane.

The Green Wave lost to Oklahoma State, 87-71, in the second round a year ago.

It's only the second career meeting between the two schools — each team won at home — and Tulane and K-State haven't met since 1976.

"We've got our work cut out for us," Cat coach Dana Altman said. "I saw them play earlier in the year, and they are a very athletic team."

But it was earlier in the year that Tulane was strutting its good stuff.

In fact, The Green Wave has followed much the same script that K-State has this season — jumping off to a strong start, bolstering its case in the national rankings and falling on harder times as the season progressed.

Tulane started the season with a 20-4 record. K-State got off to a 14-3 start. The Green Wave was ranked as high as No. 16 in the Associated Press poll — a steady improvement since falling out of the rankings in late December.

K-State was ranked 23rd after beating Oklahoma on Feb. 3.

Tulane lost four of its last five games. The Wildcats lost five of their last seven regular-season games.

"They haven't played as well late as they did early," Altman said. "But I'm not sure of the reason."

What started Tulane's demise? A 79-57 drubbing at the hands of the Temple Owls. Less than a month earlier, K-State beat that same Owl team, 86-63.

In the AP's final poll of the season, released Monday, the Cats were ranked 31st with 71 votes.

Tulane was 32nd with 53 votes. In the two teams' Thursday meeting at the Orlando Arena, Tulane is a one-point favorite.

"They're very athletic," Wildcat point guard Anthony Beane said. "They like to get up and down the floor."

But statistics would indicate that Tulane and K-State have some things in common that aren't indicative of a running team — grind-it-out, blue-collar defense and a paper-thin bench.

The Wildcats were 14-2 this season when holding opponents to less than 70 points.

In its last 13 games, Tulane has allowed an average of just 65.8 points per game.

The Green Wave is forcing an average of 20.8 turnovers every contest. K-State finished the season with a 16-turnover-per-game average.

And opponents are shooting just 42.6 percent from the floor against that defensive Wave.

The Wildcats shot a conference-low 44.3 percent from the floor.

Another similarity between the two teams is bench play.

Only seven Tulane players average more than 18 minutes a contest. And with the exception of a one-minute stint by Kenny McEntyre, only seven Wildcats got any playing time during last weekend's Big Eight tournament.

All seven of those Tulane players are averaging more than eight points a game.

Leading the way is center Anthony Reed, who has a 16-point average. He also grabs six boards every game.

The tournament game for the Wildcats is the first since 1990. Guard Askia Jones is the only current Wildcat that was on that NCAA team.

"This feels great," Beane said. "It let us know that all the hard work we did back in September is paying off."

Chummin' for salmon

The alarm rang at 4:30 a.m. I popped out of bed, ready to go. I was going salmon fishing off the California coast.

I pulled into the marina parking lot a little before six, got out of the car and waited for my friends.

I downed a tuna sandwich and a Coke for breakfast. Breakfast of champions.

My friends arrived, and we got on the boat. I was extremely excited as the guide explained how to set up our rigs for salmon.

We sat in the warm cabin, sipping coffee and looking back at the marina as we left the bay. As we left the shelter of the marina, the waves got bigger — and so did that tuna sandwich.

Our huge boat handled the 15-foot swells nicely, and I felt pretty safe considering I was 6 miles out into the Pacific. My friend Joe kept looking at me from the corner of his eye.

I was at the front of the boat, a pretty good spot for a beginner. I watched the horizon and tried to keep my bearings. I was out with the boys, and we were trying to be manly. I was not going to get seasick by losing a battle with a tuna sandwich.

The captain slowed the boat and we dropped our bait. I was faced with the decision of looking down at my rig or looking at the horizon, trying to keep my bearings, therefore winning the tuna sandwich battle.

I felt a tug, and knew I had a fish. My hook came up empty as I watched a fat sea lion come up for air, almost thanking me for that piece of fish he had just stolen off my hook.

The men, being manly, were battling the wily sea lion, 15-foot swells and the cold rain.

I was trying to be manly, but it wasn't working. I was losing a fierce battle. A battle that was not taking place on the end of my line.

I was supposed to be battling a huge salmon 60 feet down.

I lost. I lost big to that tuna one-foot down. I decided to do it and get it over with. Next thing you know, I was chummin' for salmon, hoping my stomach acid wasn't killing any ocean wildlife.

When I finally opened my eyes I was looking at the water. I stood up straight and tried to regain a little self-respect, and looked at Joe.

Joe was a gentleman, no smart remarks, just a small grin that came out of the side of his mouth.

Toward the back of the boat, I heard bits and pieces. I heard the words "landlubber" and "chumming," mixed in with laughs I knew were at my expense.

The bad taste and haze were starting to fade and something grabbed my bait. It pulled, I pulled, and the battle was on. The contest made me forget about that tuna in my tummy.

I made the customary stroll to the back of the boat so the guide could net the fish. I had the first fish, and all the old men were patting me on the back and smiling.

I was cool. I had a salmon, and they didn't. They could make chum jokes all they wanted — I had the trophy.

I also had a tuna. I had two fish and the one in my stomach was about to escape. I knew it was coming, but I wasn't going to let those old salty dogs see me chummin' any more.

I stood there smiling, looking my fellow sailors in the eyes and just being manly. But all it took was one more pat on the back. A large heavy palm hit my back, and I was finished being manly.

I started chumming again. The tuna sandwich made its way out and into the ocean. The tuna was back at home. Roaming the sea.

An old salty dog laughed and asked me what was wrong.

"I'm strictly a catch and release fisherman," I said.

LAWRENCE, Kan. — They haven't shot above 50 percent in a single game against a Division I foe since January, and they have even suffered all-time shooting lows for the Roy Williams era.

Everybody talks about how lousy Kansas is shooting. The ninth-ranked Jayhawks must be dragging a terrible percentage into their first round Midwest Regional game, right?

Wrong. "Our overall shooting percentage is 51.2," coach Roy Williams says, a bit defensively. "It was 51.5 last year. Now we're 51.2. And that is the lowest in the five years our staff has been here."

Despite a 25-6 record and their third straight regular season Big Eight title, however, the Jayhawks haven't shot consistently since late January when Long Beach State came to town and left with a shocking 64-49 victory. At the time, the Jayhawks were leading the nation with a 55.6 percentage.

They haven't been the same since. Against Oklahoma State, the Jayhawks shot 23.5 percent in the first half, their worst in Williams' five-year reign.

While losing to Kansas State last Saturday in the Big Eight tournament, they suffered through one of their poorest nights in memory.

"We missed two dunks and made four of 13 shots inside the three-second lane," Williams acknowledged.

"What am I supposed to say to them: 'Make the shots?' I think our kids want to make those shots."

In a six-game span where they went 3-3 in Big Eight games, senior guards Rex Walters and Adonis Jordan went particularly cold. By this time, defenses had figured out ways to stop much of Kansas' inside play. Those back-door layups weren't coming nearly so easy for Eric Pauley and Richard Scott.

"I think sometimes, especially at home, we wanted so much to do well that we would force things," said the 6-4 Walters, who averaged 14.2 points and was named All-Big Eight a second straight year.

"Rex and Adonis in particular get a little tight worrying about how their play is being perceived by those NBA scouts who come to every game," Williams said. "It's a normal reaction."

"I'm not satisfied with our shooting percentage. But at the same time, I look at a few things that are more important. The bottom line is points up on the board."

Possibly because of their recent shooting woes, the Jayhawks have been mentioned as prime upset material for their game Thursday against Ball State in the Mid-West Regional.

K-State offense struggles in 6-1 loss to No. 11 Arizona

DEREK NELSON

Collegian

FRESNO, Calif. — The K-State Wildcat baseball team couldn't muster up enough offense to overcome the Arizona Wildcats Tuesday night. The Cats scored in the first inning but went without crossing the plate again as they lost 6-1.

K-State, 4-7, which has struggled offensively of late, took an early lead as Tim Decker walked to lead off the game. Brian Culp then picked up one of three hits as he doubled off the left-center-field wall. Decker scored on Brian Morrow's fielder's-choice ground ball.

Then with two outs, Todd Pentering appeared to have a hit on a short-hop at the first baseman, but the umpire ruled that the line drive had been caught.

"We put ourselves in a position to win the ball game. We just didn't make a couple of plays defensively, and we couldn't come up with the big hit," Wildcat head coach Mike Clark said.

Arizona, 16-10, answered immediately as their lead off man, John Tejcek, knocked a Rob Merriman pitch over the wall for a home run. Merriman, 1-1, then retired nine of the next 10 batters, striking out five of them.

"I thought Rob did an excellent job in the game," Clark said. "After what they've been doing offensively, it was very impressive."

Arizona entered the game ranked 11th in the Baseball America poll and 20th in the Collegiate Baseball poll.

"K-State played well tonight. We've been very successful offensively lately, and they held us at bay," Arizona head coach Jerry Kindall said. "They really shut us down."

In the fourth, Arizona scored a single run to take the lead. They also picked up runs in the fifth, sixth and eighth innings to provide the winning margin. On the night, Merriman matched his season-high six strikeouts; he walked only three in 7-2/3 innings.

K-State made several attempts at a comeback but fell short of the plate each time.

In the sixth, Culp led off with his second double of the night but was stranded there when the next three Wildcat batters flew out.

In the eighth, Kevin McMullin led off with a single and advanced to second on a fielding error by the centerfielder. Again, the next three batters couldn't bring him home, and McMullin was left at third.

The Wildcats continue play in the tournament as they meet host Fresno State tonight at 7 p.m. PST.

"We just didn't make a couple plays defensively, and we couldn't come up with the big play."

UNLV's J.R. Rider suspended for forged class paper

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Collegian

LAS VEGAS — UNLV didn't make it to the NCAA tournament, and now star forward J.R. Rider won't make it to the NIT.

Rider's college basketball career ended Tuesday when UNLV officials suspended him after finding a tutor wrote part of a paper that had helped him remain eligible.

The suspension ended Rider's two-year stint at UNLV and left the Runnin' Rebels without the nation's second leading scorer going into tonight's first-round home NIT game against Southern Cal.

"It was a difficult decision because I know the commitment J.R. Rider made to stay at this institution instead of turning pro last year," UNLV athletic director Jim Weaver said at a news conference also attended by university president Robert Maxson and first-year coach Rollie Massimino.

Rider, a former K-State recruit, averaged 29.2 points a game and was the core of a UNLV team that went 21-7 but lost out on an NCAA bid after dropping five out of its last 10 games. He was a second team AP All-America pick.

"I think we will respond accordingly," Massimino said after the suspension was announced. "We will meet with our team and discuss it tonight."

The suspension came after an investigation that Rider had not done his own work in an English 102 summer course.

"It was done because it was decided he might have gotten excessive assistance on one paper," Massimino said. "But I'm totally convinced he did all the work."

Sources told The Associated Press that one of Rider's tutors came forward late Monday night and admitted to writing one of two pages of work needed to complete the correspondence course.

"That individual will not be a tutor with us any longer," he said.

Rider's classwork came into question Thursday when the Review-Journal reported English instructor Vicki Bertolino said she was pressured by school officials into giving Rider a passing grade in the three-unit class that put Rider over the 24-unit annual minimum needed to become eligible for the 1992-93 school year.

UNLV officials initially said Rider would remain eligible, and that there didn't appear to be any violations. But the probe heated up again Sunday after the newspaper published copies of two pages of Rider's work for the course, each done in different handwriting.

"Obviously, this is a very painful and difficult decision for us," Weaver said.

Both Weaver and Maxson, though, angrily denied the university had at first tried to whitewash the incident.

University officials are particularly sensitive because Massimino was introduced as a coach who stressed academics following the bitter resignation of former coach Jerry Tarkanian.

Peace Corps teaches culture

LAURA HEIDE
Collegian

Joining the Peace Corps can mean living in a country unlike our own. It is a chance to learn about a different culture, language and life.

Peter Callahan, graduate student in landscape architecture, joined the Peace Corps in May 1991. He was trained in Ngalla, a seaside community in the Solomon Islands.

There, he learned of the cultural mores and customs of the people of Heukesia, an inland jungle village of 200, in the province of Small Maliata.

He said it was like going back in time 1,200 years.

"The Solomon Islands are linguistically buried areas of the world. Within the Solomon Islands, a population of 300,000, there are 100 different languages," he said. "So we learned what was called pigeon English in order to communicate."

When Callahan arrived, the village had just completed its first permanent building, a health-care clinic.

"We were involved in setting up health care and a maintenance plan and getting people trained to be health-care workers," he said.

Medicine was provided by the government of the Solomon Islands.

"I estimate 98 percent of the population have malaria," Callahan said. "Children had worms and things like open sores because of malnutrition. They don't have access to seafood and therefore a lack of protein. They also had bush knives and would cut their fingers off and things like that."

Mark Vogl, senior in landscape architecture, said the Peace Corps was set up by former President John F. Kennedy to give people an opportunity to work in Third World countries.

"There were already predictions about world population explosion, lack of education and nutrition,"

Vogl has joined the Peace Corps and will begin training this summer. He will live in a South American country and work in environmental education.

"I want experience working with a different culture and focus primarily on environmental issues," Vogl said. "The Third World logically is where the biggest problems occur right now."

A person must be 18 to apply. However, most assignments require a college degree or a skill, such as construction, agriculture or plumbing, Vogl said.

Today there are 6,000 volunteers in 90 countries throughout Africa, Asia, the Pacific, South and Central America, the Caribbean and Central Europe.

Fields available are agriculture, forestry, fish culture, health and nutrition, education, engineering, skilled trades, small business and cooperative development and community development.

There is a monthly stipend for living allowances.

"It's not enough to save in order to bring back, but it's plenty to travel on while you're there," he said.

Volunteers receive 24 days of vacation time a year and serve two years. Once they get out, the volunteers receive a re-adjustment allowance of $200 for every month served.

Return volunteers are eligible for federal employment on a non-competitive basis for one year after, and more than 50 institutions offer scholarships.

Charles Stroh, professor of art, was in the Peace Corps between 1969 and 1971, when the Peace Corps was only six years old.

He taught Afghanistan teachers new methods of teaching English and volunteered to help out in various ways in the community.

"Those times were interesting with the political upheaval and the Vietnam War," he said.

"To me, the Peace Corps was a perfect opportunity to do something good and to make a contribution in some way. It was at the same time a chance to get away from the intensity in this country."

"I needed a couple of years to chill out," Stroh said. "It was an opportunity to think my life through, get things together and decide what I wanted to do."

During the Vietnam War, people tried to use the Peace Corps as a way to dodge the draft, he said.

"I was 26 years old — too old to be drafted," he said. "A few in my training group got draft notices.

Some were temporarily waived. Others weren't so lucky. One person drank the water, which was full of parasites, in hopes of being sick at the physical."

Vogl said the whole perception of the Peace Corps has changed since the early '70s.

"Now it's people who have seen the experience that returning volunteers had and see it as something else, not just an escape," he said. "It's a way to give back."

Stroh said it changed his way of dealing with everyday life.

"If you live in a place like that, you realize what recycling is really about. They recycle absolutely everything," he said.

"When you do come back after volunteering, you realize the way we grow up is not the best and only way," he said. "It's a reverse culture shock. You see values that you took for granted really can't be taken for granted."

He said the Peace Corps not only helped him to mature, but also allowed him to distinguish between what is really important in life and what is mostly trivial.

"In many ways it broadened my perspective of the world. It made me aware of the influence of this country. Just seeing the condition that probably the majority of the population of this world lives in enabled me to reflect on our conditions in this country and therefore select what is really important."

EDDIE

Lookin' back from his garage

There's a place on Interstate 70, just off Exit 333, where you can buy gasoline, get your truck fixed and, if you're lucky, hear a man named Eddie tell off-color jokes.

Eddie's Service Station and Garage is located in Paxico, a town with a population of 174 lying about 25 miles east of Manhattan. The station's owner, Eddie Meinhardt, can be found there every Monday through Saturday from 6 a.m. to 5 p.m., unless he's in Topeka picking up parts.

Eddie keeps pretty busy for a 74-year-old man.

But he'd probably make time to tell you stories, in a slow, deep voice with just a hint of a drawl, about the Great Depression, World War II or the wrecker business.

Look for a bespectacled man in blue insulated coveralls with pepper-gray hair peeking out from beneath a Meinhardt Farm Equipment cap — the guy who probably reminds you of your grandfather.

He'd tell you he was born Sept. 19, 1918, on a farm two miles west of Paxico.

"The doc charged $10," Eddie said, "but that night he had two on his route. So, I got by with $5."

From there the stories only get better.

"We went through hell in the '30s," Eddie said. He tells one story, which he swears is true, about applying for Air Cadet training. The final test involved being questioned by five generals.

"The first general who spoke was a doctor," Eddie said.

"He asked me why my right shoulder was higher than my left. I said I carried slop to the hogs. He asked me, 'Why didn't you use two buckets?' I said we couldn't afford two buckets."

Not all of Eddie's tales are so lighthearted, however. He could tell you of what he saw in the southwest Pacific from 1941 to 1945.

"We took Hill 660 in New Britain — Christmas Eve of '44," he said.

"One hundred ninety-five men stormed the hill, and 13 of us walked out. The rest were either killed or wounded. I think 82 were killed."

"The only way you could leave the islands would be to get a Section Eight or in a pine box."

Eddie said there were a number of ways to get a Section Eight, a discharge due to psychiatric problems.

"If you dug a hole in the sand alongside the ocean and tried to drain the ocean, they'd probably give you one," he said.

He also tells of a soldier who flagged down the general's jeep and told him Jesus Christ said he should invite the general to breakfast.

"He went home," Eddie said with a chuckle.

In 1945, Eddie returned to the United States and purchased his service station for $2,500. He saved $1,300 in the military. So, he had to borrow $1,200.

"Started the business with $99 in the cash register," he said.

"Used a 1935 Ford truck without windows to haul my gas and beer from Topeka."

Interstate 70 was still a sanded road back then, he points out.

"I used to sell beer down here — always had quite a crowd because we had the first TV in town."

Eddie married his wife, Rita, in 1946. That same year, he bought the house they still live in today.

Since then, they've had nine children, who in turn have given Eddie and Rita 16 grandchildren, ranging in age from 24 years to eight months.

Eddie doesn't agree with those who say young people today are lazy.

"I don't believe they're lazy," he said.

"I think that a lot of them lack direction."

He also feels the younger generation is not as prejudiced as his tends to be.

"Younger people are more tolerant. While I was in the service, I slept beside blacks and gays — drank out of the same bottle with 'em. They never caused me any trouble. People around here, though, would just as soon run 'em over with trucks," he said.

If you want to avoid discussing politics, this would be a good time to coax Eddie into pulling out his photo album, which is full of snapshots of the old cars he collects — his '59 Buick, his 1960 Oldsmobile, the '62 Lincoln with the "suicide doors." Eddie said they're called "suicide doors" because they open from the back.

"A guy told me the other day that they don't call 'em suicide doors anymore, though," he said.

"They call 'em see-more doors — you see more of the women's legs when they get out of the car."

All-in-all, Eddie seems to be

Riots erupt in Mogadishu

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — Fighters for the man known as Gen. Morgan reportedly captured the southern port of Kismayu from a rival clan leader Tuesday. A third Somali warlord accused the United States of taking sides.

In a separate incident in the Bakara market, a U.S. Marine was wounded in a firefight with two Somalis, one of whom was shot to death by three other Marines.

Marine Col. Fred Peck, the U.S. military spokesman for Operation Restore Hope, said Mohamed Siad Hirs, called Gen. Morgan, broke the cease-fire that had produced a semblance of peace for the 170,000 residents of Kismayu.

A Mogadishu radio station operated by Mohamed Farrah Aidid, one of Somalia's warlords, issued a statement Tuesday night accusing the U.S.-led military coalition of letting Morgan's men massacre civilians with their technical vehicles and heavy weapons.

The renewed fighting raised concerns about unrest in the capital. After Morgan invaded Kismayu on Feb. 22, Aidid accused the United States of aiding him. Riots followed in Mogadishu the next two days.

In other developments Tuesday:

—Leaders of Somalia's rival clans met for a second day of peace talks in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia. Morgan, a son-in-law of former dictator Mohammed Siad Barre, is not attending the talks, and Peck said officials do not know where he is.

—A hearing took place to determine whether Marine Sgt. Walter Johnson of Abilene, Texas, will face a court-martial for fatally shooting a 13-year-old Somali youth who he thought was carrying a grenade.

Witnesses testified that the youth had a small box in his hand as he put both arms inside the Humvee that Johnson was guarding. A decision on whether the case will proceed is expected within 10 days.

Peck said the Bakara incident occurred when a four-man patrol observed two Somali men apparently test-firing two AK-47 rifles in the market. They opened fired on the Marines, who took cover, then pursued the men.

One dropped his weapon and escaped. The other fired one shot and hit the unidentified Marine in the shoulder. The remaining Marines opened fire, killing the gunman. The Marine was reported in good condition.

Belgian forces, who assumed operational control of the Kismayu sector from the Americans on March 5, reported hearing gunfire and explosions Tuesday on the northern edge of the city shortly after dawn.

Aid halts for hungry Bosnians

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Bosnian Serb leaders played with the hopes of the hungry Tuesday in eastern Bosnia, first pledging to allow aid in, then later imposing conditions.

And as leaders of the warring factions prepared to resume peace talks in New York, Serb forces besieging Sarajevo subjected the Bosnian capital to its heaviest artillery pounding in weeks.

Ham radio operators in eastern Srebrenica reported four or five more villages in eastern Bosnia fell to Serb forces, sweeping southward on a two-week offensive. That could not be independently confirmed.

Tens of thousands of refugees from the Serb advance are crowded into Srebrenica, many living on the streets in sub-zero temperatures without adequate clothing. Relief officials said many haven't eaten in days.

They have pinned their hopes on an aid convoy, halted since Thursday by Serb forces at the Yugoslav-Bosnian border.

The convoy for Srebrenica and three others destined for eastern Gorazde, north-central Tuzla and Sarajevo, were stuck on the Yugoslav side of the border with Bosnia.

Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic pledged to allow the convoys through in a telephone conversation with the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, Sadako Ogata, said Lyndall Sachs, UNHCR spokeswoman in Belgrade.

Sachs said Karadzic promised all sick and wounded including combatants if they gave up their arms they could be evacuated, and that aid workers would be allowed to enter the town.

But Karadzic later told the Associated Press he would insist the U.N. limit its armed escort and U.N. vehicles should evacuate Serbs from Muslim-held areas.

Bombings continue in India

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CALCUTTA, India — A bomb wrecked two buildings before dawn Wednesday, killing at least 25 people and injuring 100, police and news agencies reported.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the explosion, which came five days after bombs in Bombay killed about 300 people. Calcutta, India's second-biggest city, is 1,000 miles east of Bombay.

The bomb ripped through Calcutta's Bowbazar district, a neighborhood of multi-story buildings with shops on the ground level and apartments above. The bomb set one five-story building afire, trapping several people inside, Press Trust of India said.

A police officer reached by telephone said 22 corpses were taken to hospital, and more bodies were being pulled from the wreckage.

United News of India put the initial death toll at 25 and said casualties were still arriving at hospitals, many with severed limbs and severe burns.

"Around midnight, I was aroused from my sleep by a huge explosion," said Mohan Chand Dutta, who lives near the site of the blast.

"I rushed outside, but there was only smoke. I couldn't see anything, but I could hear people screaming. There was complete chaos," Dutta said.

Samar Basak, another neighborhood resident, said private trucks collected the wounded and drove them to hospitals before ambulances began arriving. Volunteers were urging people to donate blood at the nearest clinic, he said.

Besides residents of the two damaged buildings, many poor people live and sleep on the sidewalks and in doorways in central Calcutta, and probably were among the victims. About 10 million people live in the decaying city that once was the capital of Britain's colonial empire in the Indian subcontinent.

On Friday, 13 bombs detonated in Bombay, India's biggest city, killing about 300 people and injuring more than 1,100. The bombings wrecked the stock exchange, offices and apartment buildings.

K-State than in St. Petersburg. He said a person is on their own in Russia.

"Students at K-State definitely exercise more than at St. Petersburg," he said. "There are more sporting events here, and the accessibility to play these sports is much easier."

Zikratov said there is one big stereotype between the countries that is wrong.

"Most Russians think all Americans are rich and live comfortably, but this is not true. I think this is probably due to the fact that most Americans in St. Petersburg are tourists," he said.

After finishing school at K-State, he said he will consider working in the United States or possibly going to Germany for a post-doctoral degree, he said. It will all depend on the situation in Russia.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

UNFORTUNATELY, THIS IS WHERE PEOPLE ARE PUTTING TOO MANY RETIREMENT DOLLARS.

Every year, a lot of people make a huge mistake on their taxes. They don't take advantage of tax deferral and wind up sending Uncle Sam money they could be saving for retirement.

Fortunately, that's a mistake you can easily avoid with TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs not only ease your current tax bite, they offer a remarkably easy way to build retirement income—especially for the "extras" that your regular pension and Social Security benefits may not cover. Because your contributions are made in before-tax dollars, you pay less taxes now. And since all earnings on your SRA are tax-deferred as well, the money you don't send to Washington works even harder for you. Down the road, that can make a dramatic difference in your quality of life.

What else makes SRAs so special? A range of allocation choices—from the guaranteed security of TIAA to the diversified investment accounts of CREF's variable annuity—all backed by the nation's number one retirement system.

Why write off the chance for a more rewarding retirement? Call today and learn more about how TIAA-CREF SRAs can help you enjoy many happy returns.

Benefit now from tax deferral. Call our SRA hotline 1 800-842-2733, ext. 8016.

Greenhouse goal to raise self-esteem

LYNN ANDERSON
Collegian

It's a greenhouse of human growth.

A place where, as hands diligently sift through soil, human development and positive rewards are captured and seen in the surrounding plant life.

K-State's Department of Horticulture Therapy and Big Lakes Developmental Center has rooted this greenhouse program, enabling Big Lakes' clients the abilities to blossom to their full potential.

"We let the plants and people interact," Steve Longshore, greenhouse work supervisor, said. "We let the plants be the reward."

A four county regional facility, Big Lakes includes individuals with developmental disabilities among its greenhouse clients.

"We're focusing on the needs of the people," said Richard Mattson, director of the horticultural therapy program, "the needs to exercise and to build self-esteem."

The program has been ongoing since 1975, with a federal grant enabling the horticulture department to hire 10 Big Lakes clients as employees.

"Since 1975, we went from pre-vocational experience learning, to pre-vocational experience enclave, to actual job placement," Mattson said.

Longshore said clients are being paid minimum wage to learn horticulture and produce horticulture projects in order to integrate better into society, as well as into the work force.

"The ultimate goal is to place people," Longshore said. "We now have two full-time placements."

He said he thought this was the first time in the history of Big Lakes' work with the K-State horticulture chapter that any clients had been hired into the horticulture field.

"It's a growing field," Longshore said. "We have a lot of potential applications of horticulture therapy."

Experiences for students start with the introduction to horticulture class. Students have the option to choose the Big Lakes program as one of two field projects.

Longshore said the introduction class works with clients that need more of an observation, educational and knowledge-retention interchange.

Courses that provide a follow-up are a seminar, based on case studies done in conjunction with Big Lakes and students, and an internship on the senior level.

"Being there consistently, students see the change and changes that occur in their client," Mattson said.

Clients from the center work with the horticulture students using horticulture, nature and plant-related activities to increase abilities.

"We assign clients particularly to plants," Mattson said.

"This way they can watch them grow. Because of their success with plants, it helps them grow into their own self-confidence."

Some of the skills learned are basic, Mattson said. While they may include stacking pots or writing labels on plants, these abilities can branch into parallels of important everyday life skills.

"A volume relationship can be learned through pot filling," Mattson said.

Mattson said the importance of hygiene is highlighted through cleanliness of pots, and that identification skills, linear relationships and counting skills are also acquired.

Warming up to the students and the relaxed atmosphere allow for increased worker production, Mattson said.

"There's less stress in the greenhouse environment," Mattson said. "Job skills are easier to acquire."

Student benefits stem from their role within the greenhouse.

"The benefits are the hands-on experience with the clients," Virginia Putnam, senior in horticulture therapy, said. "There's also a more personal relationship with the people who work here."

Products of the program are collaborated and brought together twice a month in plant sales.

The money raised by the Big Lakes clients and students goes toward the funding of the wages as well as to a small commission for students, Mattson said.

"We encourage them to interact with the public, and the acceptance happens very quickly with this opportunity," Mattson said.

Opportunities benefit the students as well as the clients.

"It's really a gold mine in terms of student opportunity," Mattson.

Children, community benefit from program

KRISTI HUMSTON
Collegian

Sincerity and a fondness for children often can lead to an enjoyable job, which, at the same time, benefits the community.

Thirty K-State students across campus currently are active with the Youth Education Service program, a tutoring program overseen by the Community Service Program.

YES tutors spend a minimum of three hours each week tutoring younger students at nine elementary and middle schools in the Manhattan area. While 21 of the tutors are paid, nine are volunteering their time.

Brian Hesse, student coordinator for the YES program and a sophomore in political science and history, said he got involved with the YES program after working on an eight-week project with the Community Service Program during the summer. He said he loves working with children and realized he was interested in being a part of the tutoring program.

"My favorite part is knowing that it's actually making a difference in the kids' lives," Hesse said.

Tutors work with children in a variety of areas and aren't required to have specific skills.

"A general education at college is adequate," Hesse said.

He stressed that attention and acting as a positive influence can do a lot for the younger students.

When Hesse hires tutors, he said he looks for individuals who have a sincere interest in helping the children.

Many of the tutors are majoring in education or social work, but this isn't a requirement.

"I try not to turn people away if they are sincerely interested," he said.

Kathy Kippes, freshman in elementary education, spends five to six hours tutoring each week. Last semester, she worked with a student one-on-one and is now doing more group activities such as reading and giving spelling tests.

"The kids are so nice, and you can tell they really love seeing you when you walk in," Kippes said.

Men convicted of raping retarded woman

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEWARK, N.J. — A jury found three of four young men guilty of raping a 17-year-old mentally retarded woman, rejecting their defense that the woman invited the sexual acts.

Prosecutors had argued that even if the woman consented, the men could be found guilty because they knew she was mentally retarded.

The jury agreed with the state's claim the woman, who has an IQ of 64 and the social skills of an 8-year-old, lacked the capacity to understand her actions.

The jury convicted Christopher Archer, 21, and twins Kevin and Kyle Scherzer, 22, of first-degree aggravated sexual assault with the use of force, the legal equivalent of rape. Archer and Kevin Scherzer were also each convicted of a second count of rape because the woman was mentally retarded.

The panel of seven women and five men found the fourth defendant, Bryant Grober, 21, guilty of conspiracy in the 1989 assault in Scherzer's home in the affluent New York suburb of Glen Ridge.

Each of the defendants, who played high school football together, faced four rape counts.

The charge carries a maximum sentence of 20 years in prison.

Sentencing was set for April 23.

The prosecution said Archer and Kevin Scherzer put a toy bat, stick and broom into her vagina.

Defense attorneys contended the woman was not mentally retarded and had consented and even invited the sexual acts.

In an exception to the New Jersey law that protects the privacy of rape victims, the defense was allowed to bring up limited aspects of the woman's sexual past.

Students develop proposals to save landmark

RHONDA WILSON
Collegian

Students from K-State have developed ideas that might keep Topeka's historic Union Pacific Railroad Depot from being demolished.

Last semester, interior architecture students prepared proposals for renovation of the depot.

Student proposals explored a range of ideas from a restaurant and conference center to a small museum and arts center.

The student's project not only met the educational objectives of the course, but the project might also influence whether or not the building will be saved, Jim Dubois, associate professor of interior architecture, said.

The Union Pacific Railroad has a demolition contract for the building, he said.

"They would prefer to see the building in use, but there are certain liabilities of keeping the structure vacant," Dubois said. "They are going out of their way to save the building."

The assignment idea evolved from a conversation with a former graduate who works in the state preservation office, he said.

Dubois also contacted Topeka Railroad Days Inc., the organization which currently has the developmental rights for the building and collaborated with them in developing the assignment.

Intent of the project was to show Topeka Railroad Days Inc., various possibilities for preserving and using the depot, he said.

Proposals were on display in the Statehouse, March 3-5, with the intent to make the Topeka community aware of the possibilities.

So far, no proposals have been selected for renovation plans.

"Topeka Railroad Days Inc. is now going through the process of analyzing the proposals from a marketing standpoint," Dubois said.

By this August, Union Pacific Railroad should know whether or not the structure will be torn down, he said.

"I'm very optimistic something will be done," Dubois said.

The class was given a list of ideas from Topeka Railroad Days Inc., that concerned real needs of the community and activities that would be compatible with the building.

Jeffrey Smith, senior in interior architecture, developed the idea of using the old depot for a senior center.

One benefit of the project was that it was realistic, Smith said.

"We worked with real clients who had real specific needs," he said.

For his assignment, Smith said he spoke with people from a senior center in Topeka as well as people from Manhattan's senior center. Their suggestions and their needs helped him develop his renovation suggestion.

Smith said one of the more difficult aspects of the assignment was to design the interior around the existing structure.

"Since the building is on the state historic register there are strict guidelines for what you can and can not do," he said.

pretty satisfied with the 74 years he's had so far, and he has few complaints about living them on the Kansas prairie.

"I've done pretty well," he said.

"I've had a lot of headaches — still have a lot of headaches, but I kind of enjoy 'em. I like the country. I like small towns. There's an awful lot of gossip, but I prefer it to big cities where they run over you."

Pro-lifers fined for violating injunction

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A federal judge fined Operation Rescue National and three of its leaders $282,610 Tuesday for violating his injunction last year forbidding them from blockading abortion clinics.

U.S. District Judge Louis

Oberdorfer levied the fines despite a Supreme Court decision in January forbidding federal judges from using an 1871 law as the basis for declaring women seeking abortions as a protected class, and issuing such injunctions.

The law originally was designed to protect black people from the Ku Klux Klan.

Operation Rescue National and other pro-life protesters had contended the high court's 5-4 decision effectively overturned Oberdorfer's 1989 and 1990 injunctions forbidding blockades at abortion clinics in the District of Columbia.

Oberdorfer said, however, Tuesday he can still rely on the district's trespassing and public nuisance laws for retaining federal jurisdiction, enforcing the injunction and vindicating the authority of a United States district court.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Privacy is worth any rudeness to rude roommates

DEAR CASSANDRA,

This may seem childish of me to complain about my problem to you, but I have to tell someone because I am really mad. My roommate is very rude and inconsiderate, and I am having problems living with him.

He gets into my things and eats all the food I buy for my friends and me. When I try to clean the room, he never does his part, and he still complains about it being a mess. He works a job that requires late hours, and when he comes home, he turns on the light and makes way too much noise. He doesn't even try to be quiet when he gets home, and I wake up every night.

I have tried and tried to talk to him about his rudeness, but he just shrugs off my suggestions and ignores me. I requested a new roommate at the semester, but I didn't get one.

Cassandra, I really don't know what more I can do. Please help me figure something out before I do something drastic. Thank you very much.

Sincerely,

Unhappy Roommate

DEAR UNHAPPY,

Try talking to your roommate again. Tell him exactly what you have told me. Don't beat around the bush and don't be apologetic. You are entitled to your privacy, food, possessions and quiet.

Show him this letter.

Here is my advice to him:

Hey, booger-eating moron! Quit being so rude. For the next few minutes, strain your inconsiderate little brain and imagine what it is like to live with a person such as yourself. Show some respect and compassion — you'll be a better person for it. Leave your roommate's possessions alone, do your share of the cleaning and quit being so damn loud at night. Who do you think you are?

Letters to Cassandra may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie 116, Manhattan, Kan. 66506.

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content for the purpose of conserving space. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open to the public. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be maintained in the strictest confidence.

New teachers take it to the classroom

JULIE CORBIN
Collegian

Finally having the chance to perform the skills they studied seems to be the best reward for seniors completing their student teaching.

For Shawna Phoenix, senior in elementary education, being able to put her token reward system into effect and seeing it well received is exciting. Phoenix is student teaching second grade at Central Elementary School in Wamego.

"Seeing things I've tried and seeing immediate action is really exciting," Phoenix said. "The kids love it. They really work toward the prizes. They get so excited when I pass out the tokens at the end of the day."

Phoenix said she also believes she has learned from the students.

"Seeing a student develop and learn new things is really rewarding. But I have also learned from them. I've seen the different lives of students and their different backgrounds," Phoenix said.

"Some of them have really difficult backgrounds, and watching the progress they've made helps me discover more about myself. I was really lucky as a child."

Seniors who are ready to student teach must complete a form the semester before they plan to student teach. This includes making out a wish list of their top three choices of locations and grade levels.

"The administration really tries to connect the students with the type of school they want, but it doesn't always happen," Dale Wilson, senior in elementary education, said.

"They also look to see who has reliable transportation and is able to travel, as opposed to those who are unable to travel. Those who are not able to leave Manhattan are usually put in Manhattan schools."

Wilson, who is also student teaching in Wamego, said the experience has been great.

"Everything has been wonderful. I haven't had any problems with discipline," Wilson said. "Working in an actual classroom, with my cooperative teacher, has been really beneficial, and the class is exceptional."

The cooperative teacher provides direction to the student teacher throughout the semester.

"She lets me choose what to teach. I make the decisions, and then she OKs it," Wilson said.

Students work with the teacher during the first part of their stay, taking over the reading lessons and doing small daily things such as taking attendance and the lunch counts.

Gradually, they take over the entire lesson schedule for one to four weeks and then turn the class back to the teacher.

Students in the College of Education will student teach most of a semester. However, for education students in the College of Agriculture, the program has not been structured to include an entire semester.

Steve Buss, senior in agricultural education, started his eight-week student teaching March 8.

"Ag is a very broad area. By the end of the eight weeks, I will have taught classes in animal sciences, agronomy, crop sciences, ag mechanism — basically everything in ag," Buss said.

Buss said he is excited about the opportunity.

"I'll finally get a chance to go out and do what I've been going to college for and working towards," Buss said. "I'll get some actual hands-on experience."

Student teachers have no time for classes. They spend their days in the classroom and completing lesson plans.

Chris Goins, senior in music education, is student teaching in Junction City, where classes start at 7:30 a.m.

Instead of staying in one classroom or even one location, Goins starts his day at the high school and then accompanies his cooperative teacher to a different elementary or middle school each week. By the end of his session, he will have visited all 13 elementary and middle schools in Junction City.

Goins said he was a little nervous when he first started.

"I'd say the worst experience is being put in a situation where I have to teach students and have never been in front of high school students," Goins said. "I worried about my ability to control the class and not crumble before the scrutiny of the students."

But Phoenix said it is easy to form a special bond to the elementary-age children.

"The kids really enjoy having someone different in the classroom," she said. "I get a lot of 'I Love You' notes."

Development center enrollment up this year

MICHELLE HAUPT
Collegian

Enrollment is high at the KSU Child Development Center this year.

Ranae Martin, assistant director, said it is licensed to hold 187 children.

"This year we've kept full all year long as well as maintained a waiting list," Martin said. "That's a real change from last year."

Martin said the increased attendance could be due to various promotional fliers. She said the center, located in Jardine Terrace Apartments, is centrally located for those who are going back to school.

"We have a close location to the University," Martin said.

According to the center handbook, child care and educational programs are offered to children of K-State students, faculty and staff. Children's ages range from 12 months to 12 years.

The developmental part of the center is a factor that attracts parents, Martin said. Children increase their motor skills emotionally and socially.

"We have activities to help developmentally, not just academically," Martin said.

Jana Adams, director of the center, said scholarships called childships allow child care for lower income student families at a cost more affordable to them.

"It's a big help to the center and to the students," Adams said.

Some of the money from the childships goes to help other students as well, Adams said. With a portion of the money, student employees are hired to help at the center.

"It's kind of a two-fold deal," Adams said. "We are directly helping families and helping to employ students."

Parental involvement is stressed, Martin said.

"We try to keep them aware of what's going on with their child," Martin said. "Any way a parent would like to be included we try to oblige."

Hsu-Yuan Lee, graduate student in computer science, said although space is limited at the center, she is pleased.

"It's convenient and cheaper than others," Lee said.

Deanne Gunther, senior in psychology, said she had taken her son to two other in-home, day-care facilities and prefers the center.

"He's learning a lot more here than if he was in an in-home day care," Gunther said. "It's worth the price."

Hotel fire kills 14; some jump to their deaths

Now collapsed under investigation
ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — A fire that ripped through a residence hotel Tuesday killed 14 people, including three who jumped to their deaths rather than face the flames and smoke. Others tied sheets together and climbed out upper floors.

Some of the 130 residents registered at the Paxton Hotel weren't accounted for. Twenty people were brought to hospitals.

When firefighters arrived at the four-story hotel, dozens of panicked residents were gathered at windows or dangled from them as wind-whipped flames rose 15 feet in the air above the roof and blazed out other windows.

Victims lay on the ground, some shouting in pain, while firefighters concentrated on rescuing people rather than fighting the blaze.

Robert Crowder, 61, complained that bars on the windows of his first-floor apartment prevented him from escaping.

Some residents tied sheets together and climbed out upper floors. Others jumped.

Authorities found 10 bodies inside the building. One person pulled from a window was later declared dead. Two people who jumped died at the scene; a third died later at a hospital from skull and pelvic fractures.

Some people apparently were overcome as they slept. Several victims were trapped on upper floors and one body was found in a closet.

An undetermined number of others remained unaccounted for Tuesday afternoon. Rescuers used heavy equipment to search the rubble because the partially collapsed building was too dangerous to send searchers inside.

The fire was under investigation because it traveled quickly up two of three stairwells in the building, 1-1/2 miles north of the downtown Loop, Chicago Fire Department spokesman Mike Cosgrove said.

The hotel, built in 1928, was up to code and had passed recent inspections, authorities said.

Irish family likes living in abandoned Shamrock

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SHAMROCK, Mo. — At one time, stamp collectors and Irish lovers from around the world sent mail to the Shamrock Post Office for its March 17 postmark — a green shamrock, of course.

But Shamrock is now a virtual ghost town in northeast Callaway County in east-central Missouri. Several houses stand vacant, and the wrecking ball demolished every business, except the general store, which closed in the early 1960s.

Little remains of the town's link to St. Patrick's Day, except for the green roofs and shutters of some buildings. And Bill Oliver.

The green-eyed, red-haired and mostly Irish man will turn 39 on St. Patrick's Day.

"I like it out here. It's quiet. I can shoot my gun in the yard if I want," said Oliver, who moved here two years ago with his son, his wife and her two sons. He works in Wellsville.

Oliver and his wife, Kim, said outsiders tend to abandon animals here, and a large deer population sometimes makes driving treacherous. But low county taxes, easy access to hunting and fishing and peaceful surroundings lured the Oliver and a few other residents.

After old-timers moved away or died, several St. Louis investors snapped up land, said George Schafer, who farms Shamrock land belonging to a St. Louis man.

"They don't add to the community at all, and I'm not really interested in them," Margaret Grace Dillard said of the outsiders.

Now a resident of Mexico in Audrain County, the 86-year-old historian once lived four miles west of Shamrock and rode a horse to Shamrock High School. Residents established the school in 1921. Housed in a former store, the school received no tax money but was supported by donations and tuition.

A gate and plaque now stand at the empty field where the school stood. Some area residents thought taxes supported the school, Dillard said, and they burned the school.

"They thought it was costing them something, but it wasn't," Dillard said.

The town's population is unknown. Records from the 1990 census do not list Shamrock, and Dillard said she is not sure when the town was founded or what its boundaries are.

Legend gives rise to two stories about the town's name, neither of which relates to Ireland. Shamrock has been home to people of all nationalities, not just those of Irish descent.

According to one story, mail carriers from Wellsville in Montgomery County stopped 2-1/2 miles east of Shamrock, and if residents did not meet them, postal workers would stash mail between two rocks. Hence the name Shamrock.

Dillard does not have much faith in this story, but she acknowledged its charm. She considers the other story more believable: Some early residents needed a name. They saw some large limestone rocks outside a building, and Shamrock was born.

From its beginnings, Shamrock grew to include two stores, a few blacksmith shops, a drug store, a doctor's office and the post office (located in the one store that still stands).

"It is interesting to note that the postmaster at Shamrock often changed," Dillard wrote in a 1984 history of the town. "It depended on which political party won the presidential election."

The civic group known as Modern Woodmen had its hall above the general store. That's where they welcomed back Dorothy Scholl, an Army nurse held as a prisoner of war for two years during World War II.

Also at the general store building, residents attended community meetings and dances. Store owner Sam Lail ran a tight ship, Dillard said.

"No drunkenness or rowdiness was allowed," Dillard wrote in her historical record. "And if the dances were held on Saturday night, Mr. Lail always made his appearance a few minutes before twelve o'clock. Nothing was ever said, but the fiddles were soon cased and the dances ended. Mr. Lail held the respect of those in the community; therefore there was never dancing on the Sabbath."

Club works on unsolved mysteries

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LECOMPTON, Kan. — Long after the police have thrown up their hands in frustration, and the gumshoes have lost their way on trails gone cold, unsolved mysteries enter the realm of the London Club.

No case is too old for the club's 300 members worldwide who are trying to solve mysteries as varied as President Lincoln's assassination and the crimes of Lizzie Borden and Jack the Ripper.

From its base in Lecompton, Kan., the London Club keeps tabs on mysteries of all sorts. Dennis Baranski, the founder and international chairman, disseminates results of research to members in far-flung places such as Britain, Germany, Nigeria, Israel and West Africa.

"Most of us lead very mundane lives," Baranski said, explaining his passion. "We do our job, we come home, have our hobbies and spend time with our family, and the years seem to be rolling by. But when you're involved in something like this, it's almost like you can leave your mark, not historically like some celebrated figure, but just by doing something noteworthy enough that someone else may consider it important long after you're dead."

Baranski formed the group in the mid-1970s after reading several books on Jack the Ripper.

His inspiration is The Baker Street Irregulars (the Sherlock Holmes Society).

"They decided to focus their interest on a fictional character," Baranski said. "I thought, 'Wouldn't it be interesting if there were some other people who were interested in the Jack the Ripper case to find out if they had some theories about it, some potential solutions, some people you could correspond with?' I did a little research to find out if there were any other organizations (like that) and there weren't."

So, he created the London Club with a brief listing in the Encyclopedia of Associations.

The club specializes in unsolved crimes of the past and present, alleged criminal conspiracies and controversial trial verdicts.

Among cases currently being investigated are the Lindbergh baby kidnapping in 1932, the Hindenburg disaster in 1937, the Amelia Earhart disappearance in 1937, the Jimmy Hoffa disappearance in 1975 and the Zodiac Killer, who ran amok in the San Francisco area from 1966 to 1974.

During the last two decades, authors and documentary makers have sought the London Club. So has a lawyer for the wife of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, the man executed in the Lindbergh baby kidnapping and murder case. Baranski provided the lawyer, Robert Bryan of San Francisco, with information from his own research and alerted other members to Bryan's request.

Baranski has accumulated a personal reference library of more than 7,000 volumes, many relating to crime and mystery. Friends and relatives said he is often so enthralled by his own research that he completely loses track of dates and time.

Besides being a voracious reader and an armchair detective, Baranski is also a lawyer, businessman, writer, real estate agent, investment broker, inventor, literary agent, book publisher, jury selection consultant and former research librarian.

But his main interest is the London Club.

While members' identities and their research are kept confidential, Baranski discussed one project by a member who has hopes of a significant breakthrough concerning the assassination of Abraham Lincoln.

After John Wilkes Booth was shot, military authorities caught four "co-conspirators" and hanged them. One of the conspirators was Mary Surratt. Before they were executed, the conspirators were not allowed to talk with anyone except their guards.

That's where the mystery begins. "One of our researchers has been in touch with the family of one of the guards, an elderly woman whose grandfather was the guard of Don't worry. There's nothing wrong with that beer, and the food isn't spoiled. They're supposed to be green.

Some local businesses will be featuring green drink specials and green food as part of today's St. Patrick's Day celebrations.

Harry's Uptown Supper Club will feature both green drinks and food.

"We'll have Boulevards Irish Ale and green beer," Chef Michael Patchen said. "We'll also have Irish soda bread, and for lunch corned beef and cabbage."

"Then for dinner I'll have a North Atlantic Salmon with a green sauce, which is partially white wine, shallots — it looks green."

Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon will celebrate today as well as during the Aggieville celebration Saturday.

"On Wednesday we will have a free live band called the Wild Ones," Rusty Wilson, owner of Last Chance, said. "Then we'll be featuring green draws of Coors Light — 32 ounces. We'll have bratwurst and sauerkraut. Guinness and Hope beers will be on special. We'll also have green shots and green T-shirts available."

"On Saturday we'll open at 8 a.m., and we'll have green eggs and ham. We'll also have green screwdrivers, green Bloody Marys, green beer and the same food and drink specials we have Wednesday," Wilson said.

Hibachi Hut in Aggieville will also celebrate on Saturday.

"We are right at the finish line for the races," Chris Clowers, dining room manager, said. "We'll be setting up a booth and serving bratwurst, kraut and cajun food. That's about all we're doing to celebrate St. Patty's day."

HISTORY

Myths surround St. Patrick

Feast day a national holiday in Ireland; traditions grounded in history, evolved from patron saint's exploits

STEPHANIE FUQUA

Collegian

He was born in western Britain, taken captive at age 16 and sold into Irish slavery. After seven years he escaped, became a priest and is credited with Ireland's conversion to Christianity.

St. Patrick became the patron saint of Ireland and his feast day is not only celebrated in Ireland, but throughout the world.

March 17 is a national holiday in Ireland, and a secular holiday elsewhere in the world. The holiday was celebrated as early as the seventh century in parts of Ireland and quickly grew from there. The first celebration in the United States was March 17, 1737 in Boston.

The traditions and myths of St. Patrick's Day, including wearing shamrocks, the color green and "chasing snakes" are all grounded in history. Most have evolved from myths springing from the exploits of St. Patrick.

Patrick was a Christian missionary to Ireland in the fifth century A.D. In his teens, he was taken captive and sold into slavery. Not religious before he was taken captive, he turned to God during the seven years he spent in Ireland.

According to history, Patrick had a dream "sent from God" that a ship was waiting to take him home. Patrick escaped, walked 200 miles and came to a port where there was a ship waiting.

After convincing the captain to let him on board, Patrick sailed on the ship for three days. It landed in Brittany, and Patrick and the crew wandered, starving, through the desolate country for weeks.

Finally a bunch of wild pigs crossed their path and they averted starvation. Patrick eventually was reunited with his parents and had another dream from God.

In this dream, a man came toward him with a letter. The top of the letter read, "The voice of the Irish." As a result of this message, Patrick studied to be a priest and became a bishop for the Irish mission.

Although he is credited for converting all of Ireland to Christianity, Patrick was modest and claimed he converted only a portion of the country.

Through his work, many legends about Patrick spread across the country and continued even after he died.

One such legend claims Patrick went to the top of Crochan Aigle, to "joust" with a messenger of God.

According to legend, an angel told Patrick his list of demands was too long, and Patrick vowed to stay on the hill until his demands were met.

He stayed for forty days and nights, until the angel returned and bargained with him. Patrick obtained a long list of privileges, including one that said Ireland, alone of all nations, will be spared the torments and tortures of Judgment Day. Seven years before the day a great sea will cover Ireland, and on Judgment Day Saint Patrick himself has obtained the privilege of judging Ireland.

The hill is now named Crochan Patrick.

The shamrock is the national plant of Ireland. The word shamrock comes from the Gaelic word "seamrog" which means trefoil. The shamrock is said to be the plant picked by St. Patrick as a symbol to illustrate the doctrine of the trinity. The trinity is a Christian doctrine that explains the presence of one God incorporating three persons, the Father, Son and Holy Spirit. Historians have disputed the shamrock legend by saying the shamrock resembles a cross and was worn as such.

Another myth about St. Patrick gives him credit for "banishing the snakes" from Ireland. However, historians say snakes were never in Ireland.

The Norse word for toad is "paud." When the Norse people came to Ireland, they noticed there were no toads. They heard of a man called "Paudrig" and assumed that meant "toad-expeller." Toads became mixed up with snakes and forever after, people have had snake chases on St. Patrick's day.

Parade to start fun in Aggieville

Hollywood stuntmen part of festivities; new contest to be started

RON LACKEY
Collegian

Aggieville will begin its St. Patrick's day festivities on Saturday with a literal bang.

To kick off the celebration, former stuntmen from Hollywood will be in town to gun it out in a good-old fashioned gunfight in the dusty streets of Aggieville.

Clint Jones, a member of the Stuntman Hall of Fame, will help begin the parade.

"We will put on a show before and after the parade. Our shows last about 10 minutes," Jones said.

After the shoot-out, the parade will begin at noon. Cheryl Sieben, executive director of Aggieville Merchants' Association, said the parade would have a lot to offer the spectator of any age.

"We are going to have the Caledonian Bag Pipe Band in our parade. They just performed in the Kansas City parade," she said. "We are also going to have the Fort Riley First Division Band play for us."

Sieben also said the parade would include the Jaycee's Lawn Mower brigade, the Shriners and their mini-wheels, lots of horses and politicians.

"We have a lot of city commissioners and school board candidates because of the upcoming elections," she said.

At 1 p.m. the two mile Fun Run will begin. The ten kilometer race and three mile walk will follow at 2 p.m.

Janet Daniels is in charge of setting up the races.

"We have about 400 people right now, but we usually end up with about 1,100 people," she said. "Half of them are in the ten kilometer, and the other half are people who are going to run in the two mile fun run."

At 3 p.m., the awards and prize drawings will be presented in the city parking lot behind Kite's Bar and Grille.

The barbecue will complete the days festivities with food being served at 4 p.m. in Triangle Park.

This year people who attend the parade may participate in a new contest.

"It is called, 'Chase the Snakes out of Aggieville,'" Sieben said.

"The contestants will get a card, get snake stamps from Aggieville merchants and bring them back to us for a free T-shirt. Then they will also be eligible to win one of 15 prizes from Aggieville Merchants," Sieben said.

Fun cycles will be available in the parking lot behind Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon.

"They are basically over-grown big wheels," Sieben said. "They are a lot of fun and can be ridden by both adults and kids."

"Last year the parents would sneak into Last Chance for a beer while their kids were riding the fun cycles," Sieben said.

Shamrock is one of two to share name

Dillard said the town's population dropped, partly because gravel roads started replacing mud roads, and people traveled to cities to shop.

"When the roads got good, they deserted those little towns," he said.

Some of the older people now living in Shamrock moved to the area in the 1950s. Don and Cathryn Simmons used to go dancing at Shamrock. They moved here in 1956, and today they raise chickens, turkeys, pheasants and other animals on their 181-acre spread.

"It's home to me. Good people live around Shamrock," Simmons said recently, as she offered a dozen eggs collected from her chicken coop to some visitors.

Another couple — Lonnie Kelch, 81, and his wife, Agatha, 68 — moved here in 1952.

"I didn't want to raise my kids in town. I came out here," Kelch said. She said, "I just like the open space. We enjoy it very much. If you want to go outside barefoot, you go outside barefoot. That's the way I look at it."

The only other U.S. town called Shamrock is in Texas, Kelch said. It has nearly 2,300 people. The post office there reported that it, too, has a green shamrock for a postmark.

Mary Surratt and a prolific letter writer," Baranski said. "We have some hope that these letters can be rounded up by the family. Hopefully, what they are going to show is that she apparently spoke to the guard protesting her innocence and naming some other names. ...

"If it is found, it could be a major breakthrough and also help shed some light on the 18 missing pages of the Booth diary," he said.

Other members are researching different aspects of the Lincoln assassination.

"There's the question of why John Parker, the guard who was assigned to Lincoln, left his post at Ford's theater; why Booth was able to cross the Navy Yard Bridge, even though there was a guard at the bridge; and why for two hours after the assassination all the telegraph equipment was down in Washington, D.C.," he said.

"And where are all the 18 missing pages from the Booth diary? It's a very interesting case."

Baranski is writing a novel about a Maryland farmer who unearths a metal box containing the missing pages of the Booth diary. Four book publishing houses have expressed interest in it, and a television producer is considering a fictionalized version of the London Club for a one-hour dramatic series.

Preliminary approval for minors program

DAVID OLSON
Collegian

Students may soon be able to pursue minor fields of study alongside their majors.

The Faculty Senate Academic Affairs Committee on Tuesday approved a plan for implementing an undergraduate minors program.

Faculty Senate will discuss the program in April. If approved, the program would become effective in spring 1994.

Nancy McFarlin, assistant professor of libraries and chair of academic affairs, said the minors program was suggested by Student Senate in 1989.

"At that time, academic affairs didn't really know how to deal with it. So, we chose not to," she said.

McFarlin said a subcommittee started work on the plan during the 1991-92 school year, and three different drafts were considered before the current version was passed by academic affairs.

The details of the development of a minors program would be left to the discretion of individual departments. In general, however, a minimum of 15 credit hours would be necessary to obtain a minor.

McFarlin said the overall response to the program has been positive.

"The actual guidelines, from an academic standpoint, have not been challenged," she said.

However, some administrative concerns have been raised.

Diane Barker, transcript specialist for the College of Arts and Sciences, said problems could arise, such as a lack of faculty advising time and an increased demand for courses.

Barker said the minors plan makes no mention of administrative support for the program. A minors program, she said, would necessitate extra verification of course work, meaning more time would have to be spent looking over transfer work and approving substitutions.

McFarlin said she is aware of these concerns, and also recognizes a minors program could cause some confusion in regard to interdisciplinary studies. She said these problems, however, are not the responsibility of academic affairs.

McFarlin said individual departments or colleges will have to decide how they want to handle the details of a minors program, or even if they want to have one at all.

"If they don't feel they have the money or advisers, they shouldn't do it," she said.

Kenneth Gowdy, associate dean of the College of Engineering, said many students would like to have the opportunity to list minors on their transcripts.

"It would be an advantage for students in terms of professional preparation, as well as being helpful in seeking employment," Gowdy said.

Derrick Blocker, professor of entomology, said he is enthusiastic about the program.

"I think it would be a very beautiful thing for our department," Blocker said. "We have gone so far as to start making proposals on the assumption that it will be approved."

McFarlin said she does not want to guarantee that the minors program will pass Senate.

"When things go to the Senate, there's always a question," she said.

However, she said, "I would hope the Senate will take the Academic Affairs Committee's recommendations."

Two more toss hats into ring

Schwenk and Munson stress accountability, student communication

STEPHANIE FUQUA
Collegian

Doug Schwenk and Michelle Munson became the fourth pair of candidates to announce for student body president and vice president Wednesday.

Schwenk, senior in education physics, and Munson, sophomore in chemical engineering and College of Engineering senator, said they can bring unique perspectives and accountability of faculty, finances and student government to the offices of president and vice president.

"I feel I have something strong to add to student government," Schwenk said. "Student government is good, but definite improvements can be made."

Schwenk was a contractor in the construction business before he came to K-State, and he said that gave him the ability to work with money.

Being president of Golden Key National Honor Society and a city employee with the fire department has given Schwenk leadership skills and the ability to work with people, he said.

"I feel I have good ideas, some contributions to make," Schwenk said.

Schwenk said accountability of faculty, finances and student government are a few of the ticket's goals.

"We want to push for mandatory faculty reviews and mandatory student evaluations of all faculty, even tenured ones," Schwenk said.

"We want long-term financial planning with the possibilities of incorporation and mandatory student approval of all fee increases and new student fee increases," Schwenk said.

Schwenk and Munson said they would have a student referendum and have students vote on the proposed fee increases.

"The immediate reaction of the administration is that is really illogical because students have little information about fee increases," Munson said. "That is a really bogus argument."

"It would force student government to work harder for the students," Schwenk said.

Communication with students also is important to Schwenk.

"We'll have a bi-weekly forum with the student body president and vice president, and any student with issues to voice can bring them to a public place," Schwenk said. "We'd also like a daily column in the paper or a daily paper on the bulletin board in the Union called 'what student government did for you yesterday.'"

Above all, Schwenk said he has the ability to get things done.

"This campaign is personally hard for me because I'm not a talker — I'm a doer," Schwenk said.

Munson said one of the main reasons she is running is to be associated with Schwenk, because she said she feels their talents are complementary.

"I am honored to be associated with Doug," Munson said. "I think the true strength of the ticket is how well Doug and I complement each other. Integrity and responsibility. I think with that we can bring complementary skills and experiences to the ticket. I think at the same time we share the same philosophy."

The role of the vice president in student government is one thing that excites Munson.

"I am excited about taking the role of vice president and being able to add to the effectiveness of student government," Munson said.

Unlike other candidates, Schwenk said he would not offer any solutions to the campus parking problem.

"We do have some good ideas," Schwenk said. "But right now, I'm not going to offer a token gesture. I'm not going to promise something I can't deliver."

Schwenk said he would need both short-term and long-term solutions to the problem.

Schwenk and Munson said they are not worried about the glut of candidates for this race.

"I don't have anything against the other candidates," Schwenk said. "I have things to contribute — ideas and myself. Students are intelligent enough to make the best choice for the University."

Their complementary strengths are advantageous, Munson said.

"The other tickets don't have the balance of skills and experience that Doug and I have. Our intentions, character and ingenuity stands on its own," Munson said.

The only international student from New Zealand at K-State is a house mother for a fraternity house.

Debra Duncan, graduate student in human development and family studies, said she sometimes has a hard time explaining her living situation at K-State.

"I'm in an unusual situation. I share a house with 60 men," she said.

Duncan said she is more like a friend to the students who live in Kappa Sigma than a mother or counselor.

Mark Schneider, freshman in pre-physical therapy, said Duncan is easy to talk to.

"She is really cool. You can talk to her as a friend," he said.

Duncan said she became a house mother, after a member of a group of people she was working with in her department joked about her being a house mother.

She said the following day an application was brought to her, which she completed, and surprisingly she got the job.

"It's more skills than age that got me the job,"

Award-winning scholar visits K-State

KATHY WASKO
Collegian

As part of K-State's diversity effort, the College of Arts and Sciences brought in John Edgar Tidwell, from Miami University in Ohio, as this week's visiting scholar.

He was invited by the Office of Multicultural Affairs and the English department.

"We try to get people who have a publication record or who we think will be good in the classroom as well as other areas related to diversity," Assistant Provost of Multicultural Affairs Mordean Taylor-Archer said.

Tidwell has lectured in a variety of classes this week. In addition, he attended a presentation and reception for the Friends of the Library.

"The real important thing in terms of the visiting scholar program is that it is a way of increasing the visibility of faculty of color in the classroom," Taylor-Archer said.

Tidwell is an associate professor of English at Miami University who was recently tenured and promoted.

He received his bachelor's degree in English from Washburn University, his master's from Creighton University and his doctoral degree from the University of Minnesota.

Tidwell has won awards in research at Miami University, and he is the editor of the book "Livin' the Blues: Memoirs of a Black Journalist and Poet."

The book is an autobiography of journalist and poet, Frank Marshall Davis.

"I 'inherited' his manuscript as a result of some research I had started on Davis back in 1980 and 1981. At that time, I was trying to do some research for an entry for the Dictionary of Literary Biography," he said.

To continue his research, Tidwell needed more information. He contacted Davis, who then referred him to a friend of his who was already typing his memoirs. Davis said Tidwell could request a copy of his life story.

"That is how I came into possession of the essential manuscript that constitutes this book. A couple of years ago, I was asked by the University of Wisconsin press if I would be interested in editing this project," Tidwell said.

Tidwell plans on following this autobiography with a book on the collective poems and selected prose of Davis.

Davis was born in Kansas and spent a year at Friends University in Wichita. He then came to K-State to study journalism. It was here that Davis began writing his poetry.

On Wednesday afternoon, Tidwell had a forum in the Union Little Theatre about Davis and his contribution to journalism.

"His beginnings for his journalism and his creative writing were on this very campus," Tidwell said.

Solutions from your Apple Campus Reseller:
a lot of Macintosh for an affordable price.

The best investments start with inside information.

Built-in video support lets you add up to a 16" Apple display with 256 colors.

It runs over 4,000 Macintosh programs, which all work in the same, consistent, intuitive way.

A screaming 25 MHz 68030 microprocessor helps the Macintosh LC III computer run up to 50% faster than its best-selling predecessor.

Its internal disk drive comes in three big sizes: 40MB, 80MB or 160MB. So you can store lots of papers, letters, notes, ideas.

Add up to seven external hard disk drives, scanners or other devices through the SCSI port.

A built-in SuperDrive™ disk drive reads from and writes to Macintosh- and MS-DOS-formatted disks.

4MB of RAM is standard. For complex graphics or engineering programs, you can even expand your LC up to 36MB.

The new Apple Macintosh LC III.

When you know what we've built into the new Macintosh™ LC III computer, its low price tag looks even better. It's the successor to Apple's top-selling personal computer—the Macintosh LC II. And it has even more speed, power and flexibility. Plus built-in networking, built-in file sharing and more. See the new Macintosh LC III today by visiting your Apple Campus Reseller. Where you'll get special student pricing, as well as service during college.* And discover the power of Macintosh. The power more college students choose. The power to be your best.*

K-State alumni help surpass goal for campaign

RHONDA WILSON
Collegian

K-State alumni have come through again. Their support and donations are bringing the $100 million Essential Edge Campaign to a successful end.

KSU Foundation set a goal five years ago to raise $100 million in cash gifts and $25 million in planned gifts, such as endowments and insurance policies for the University.

Nearly all the money received will be directed toward endowed scholarships and professorships, new equipment for study, teaching and research and toward improving services and facilities.

The campaign is divided into 11 different project goals. Intercollegiate Athletics, University Libraries, the New Art Museum and each of the eight colleges are striving to reach individual campaign goals.

Last summer, the campaign surpassed the $100 million mark and the $25 million goal for planned gifts.

The figures from Feb. 28, 1993, show the Foundation has raised $148,900,000 in cash, pledges and planned gifts.

The agriculture and engineering colleges, University Libraries and Athletics projects already have surpassed their goals.

Other colleges have not quite reached their goals.

The Essential Edge Wrap-up Campaign, the last phase of the overall campaign, will focus on helping those colleges meet individual goals.

"There are specific efforts within several colleges to achieve certain goals," said Kirk Baughan, associate director for the Essential Edge Campaign.

The projects that are close to reaching their goals are the colleges of education, human ecology, veterinary medicine and the Marianna Kistler Beach Art Museum.

During the final phase of the campaign, several activities will take place, with special emphasis placed on contacting potential donors who have not yet made a pledge toward the campaign.

Individuals have been selected for the wrap-up phase because they have either expressed an interest in participating in the campaign or have attended one of the many regional meetings, Baughan said.

Students will be calling about 1,500 alumni to ask them for pledges.

"Because of our experience with the Telefund, we have found students are successful in getting pledges," Baughan said.

"In general, when students call alumni, they have a better success rate," he said. "Students are able to express enthusiasm for the University and its programs, and alumni respond to that message."

Certain alumni also will be receiving a videotape encouraging donations to the University.

This videotape features Gordon Jump, a 1957 K-State graduate and a national chairman for the campaign.

In conjunction with the wrap-up phase, a series of articles will be appearing in the K-Stater Magazine.

Gordon Dowell, director of publications for KSU Foundation, said the articles have been written by campaign donors. The articles express their commitment to K-

State and are meant to encourage other alumni to also support the University, he said.

Throughout the campaign, the Foundation has been happy with the response from K-State alumni.

"Overall, we're extremely pleased with the success we've had, not only with the fund-raising aspect, but also with volunteer involvement and the uncovering of new leadership," Mark Moore, director of the Essential Edge Campaign, said.

Local campaign gets help from celebrity

RHONDA WILSON
Collegian

You probably know him as Arthur Carlson from the hit series "WKRP in Cincinnati," but what you may not know about Gordon Jump is that he is a 1957 K-State graduate.

Recently, Jump has been involved with the University by being a spokesman for the five-year, $100 million Essential Edge Campaign.

He became involved in the campaign when Art Loub, former president of KSU Foundation, approached him to emcee the Essential Edge Kickoff Gala.

"When he told me how much money they were trying to raise ... I thought their goals were too high," Jump said. "But they weren't, were they?"

Jump has been involved in the campaign by being the emcee for the gala, and now he is appearing in a videotape for the wrap-up phase of the campaign. Through these activities, he has been able to speak to many people about K-State.

"I've expressed honest feelings in an institution that is on the road to seeing greater things," he said. "I'm delighted to have been a part of it."

As a national spokesperson for the campaign, he took the opportunity to remind alumni there is more to being a graduate than just hanging the diploma on the wall, Jump said.

"When we leave the University, we leave with a self-oriented mentality. We've been there, paid tuition and taken the academic information we've been given to do what we want. We become goal-oriented in success and lose sight of the university or school that helped prepare us," Jump said.

COLUMNS

Columns are the opinions of only the columnist. They do not reflect the views of the Kansas State Collegian, but instead offer a differing viewpoint.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Here we go again

THE ISSUE

Manhattan gas stations and convenience stores still charge more for gas than nearby towns.

WE SUGGEST

Buy your gas out of town.

It's time once again for our obligatory editorial on the outrageous scam being pulled by many area gas stations and convenience stores.

This editorial is obligatory due to the unfortunate fact these establishments seem not to care that they are gleefully still ripping off K-State students. Except now they aren't even waiting for student vacations to hike prices — now, they're keeping them continuously jacked up.

Two weeks ago, service stations in Ogden were charging 4 to 11 cents less per gallon of basic unleaded gasoline. Gas prices in Lawrence are, time after time, lower than Manhattan's.

What's the deal here? Ogden is smaller, and Lawrence is bigger than Manhattan. So, the blame can't be on the size of the town.

In August 1990, State Attorney General Bob Stephan launched an investigation into the possibility of stations collaborating on the raising of gas prices. That went nowhere because such an accusation would be hard to prove.

What is not hard to prove, however, is that Manhattan's gas prices are unreasonably higher than neighboring towns.

It's a shame this editorial is becoming a regular feature in the Collegian every semester, but it's a bigger shame that these Manhattan establishments don't give a damn about Manhattan consumers.

If you're driving anywhere for spring break, buy your gas elsewhere so you can save yourself some money. Send a message to local stations that the era of greed is over.

Doing the LSIML

I recently realized why I am not filthy rich. One reason, and this will come as earthshaking news to my fellow columnists here at the Collegian, is that we are paid the enormous sum of roughly $1.00 per column inch.

Now that our exorbitant salary is public knowledge, I know some of you will cry that the Collegian is getting short-changed, but let me tell you we columnists already carry the crushing burden that our best work will probably never make it past being clipped and hung on someone's refrigerator with a magnetic banana next to instructions left for some zit-faced adolescent to clean up one of those little "love packages" left by the family dog.

I have the additional personal satisfaction (judging from my mail) that my best work serves a dual function as toilet tissue for many readers and also as fire-starting material in a number of fashionable incendiary devices used by local religious cults.

The other reason is that I am not cashing-in on the state's workers' compensation program, such as the former Kansas Insurance Commissioner Fletcher Bell.

BRAD SEABOURN

40 pounds. "I immediately had a sharp pain in my lower back, and I could not straighten up," Bell said.

I tried this very same scam years ago on the morning I was to put on a tuxedo and meet my future (and current) wife to exchange marriage vows. Actually, I first said I was feeling a little light-headed, which is a normal malady for any male whose prolific and varied sexual activity is about to be severely curtailed, to which my future (and current) wife responded by hammering me with a kidney punch, and THEN I said I had a sharp pain in my lower back, and I could not straighten up. I also managed to verbalize a garbled observation that I could not breathe as my vision blurred and just before I passed out.

The correct chronology of events during intense premarital activities is critical to the accurate filing of any future domestic disturbance reports with the police.

However, I know many of us can sympathize with Mr. Bell. I am sure he has had to suffer considerably while trying to work and do various other activities that he can not afford to miss. Like golf.

An avid golfer, Mr. Bell has managed to play golf since the injury. How? I do not know, but I can assure you $94,469 is sufficient incentive for me to do the twist on the 18th hole of any golf course, in broad daylight, wearing nothing but a strategically located Carol Lee donut on a certain part of my lower anatomy.

Except for maybe the donut, I doubt Mr. Bell feels any different. However, it would not surprise me that, after doing the twist on the 18th hole, he were to claim, "I immediately had a sharp pain in my lower back, and I could not straighten up."

That's OK Fletcher. We will just play around you.

What at honey? You resent my exaggerating events that never happened in our marriage, and if I print this you are going to retaliate and use the word processor to make up a bunch of idiotic stories about me?

My wife. Ha! She kills me. How could she possibly write ANYTHING using the word processor when she can't even find the on/off switch on the compu

For those readers who are not aware, Fletcher Bell, as insurance commissioner from 1971 to 1991, oversaw part of the state's workers' compensation system. He also saw expenditures from the fund increase from $8 million to about $32.5 million during his tenure. Then, not long after leaving this position, he was awarded $94,469 for a back injury he suffered in January 1989 while taking his briefcase out of his car trunk.

According to an account in the Kansas City Star, Bell claimed he suffered the injury when he was attending a business meeting in Kansas City. He testified at a hearing on the case that he opened the trunk of his car and reached for his briefcase, which he stated was loaded with many documents and weighed an estimated 30 to

Pictures tell the story a wee bit too vividly

Editor,

Today, I was in the K-State Union embracing democracy as I viewed the different tables set up for all sorts of things like condoms.

While I am always pleased with people who are willing to stand up for what they believe in, I was appalled at the pro-life group's table. The group was running a video and had disgusting posters of — choose your own term — zygote life, potential life, fetus, I don't care. It was gross.

I am pro-choice, but I respect anyone's right to be pro-life. However, you won't see me grossing people out in front of the Union cafeteria with pictures of beaten, neglected and starving children.

The graphic display is justified by facts

Editor,

In response to Brinton Everett's March 17 letter, I appreciate your concern with the Students for the Right to Life tables at the Union.

I wish we didn't have to show those pictures. However, no longer can people read about a tragedy and be moved to do something about it. For example, we would not have cared about the starving people in Somalia if we hadn't seen the pictures on television. Also, Hitler might not have been seen as such a bad guy if we hadn't seen people thrown into the death camps.

Likewise, abortion is a modern-day holocaust that kills thousands of babies each day. More humans die in this tragedy than they do in wars. I would suggest that if a person can't bear to look at the horrific pictures, then they shouldn't be tolerating abortion.

BOMBING

Actions of one are not indicative of all

Editor,

In Islam, there is no place for terrorists. No matter what the reason, terrorist activities are forbidden in Islam. A true Muslim never supports any form of violence toward innocent civilians. As a Muslim, I must condemn the notorious bombing of the World Trade Center. No one can justify this inhumane, barbarian attack on innocent people.

Leaders of the main American Muslim organizations have also condemned the bombing of the World Trade Center. The full text of their statement is given below:

"We are profoundly shocked and outraged by the bombing of the World Trade Center. We unequivocally and forcefully condemn this brutal act of violence and join other citizens in offering our condolences to the families of the deceased and to others affected by this tragic event.

"In some reports, the person accused of this wanton bombing has been described as a 'Muslim fundamentalist.' We wish to state, in clearest terms, that this act has no basis in Islam. It is utterly un-Islamic. As a Book-and-Law-based belief system, Islam, one of the three Abrahamic faiths, decrees rule of law and maximum respect for human life. Islam absolutely prohibits any form of violence toward innocent civilians, particularly women and children, even in times of war.

"During the past week, this and other acts of violence by various cults, fringe groups and individuals oblige us to re-affirm our commitment to peaceful pluralistic co-existence. These acts also oblige us to ensure that these tragic events are not used as an excuse to stereotype and malign entire communities.

"We therefore call on all journalists, particularly the mainstream anchor persons and news talk-show hosts, to identify the accused with reference to his act and not with reference to his faith. Otherwise, it will be like implicating all Christians for acts of the Branch Davidians in Waco, Texas. It is important to recall here that in describing the Davidians, Associated Press called them a 'religious cult' and not a 'Christian cult.' We sincerely hope that the same journalistic objectivity and sensitivity will be employed in covering the bombing of the World Trade Center."

EVOLUTION

Biology textbook refutes claims of others

Editor,

Perhaps Ryan Winter needs to have it explained that scientific empiricism demands that any theory must be demonstrable, quantifiable, and above all ... reproducible. In chapter 38 of Biology: The Unity and Diversity of Life, the textbook of K-State's Biology 198 course, it said scientists are not able to reproduce life as evolutionary theory demands.

For almost 160 years, the disciples of evolution have been unable to reproduce the chance creation of life, but we must have faith. We are called upon to have faith, as Dr. Zimmerman emotionally puts it, in "a miracle of evolution, which took place in the fullness of time" (module 18, Bio 198).

Robert Campbell insists that toxically immune rats are no longer rats but have "evolved" into a new species. If Campbell cuts the tail off of a rat, can he still call it a rat? What if he cuts off two of its legs — can he call it a rat? And if he cuts off all four of its legs, it doesn't matter what he calls it — it won't come.

Cunningham deserves credit for success

Editor,

During halftime of the Big Eight tournament semi-final game between KU and K-State Saturday afternoon, there was a TV graphic listing the Phillips 66 Big Eight "All Surprise Team." The surprise of this team was the absence of Deryl Cunningham from the team. This was a major injustice.

All the members of the team, including Anthony Beane of K-State, were deserving of the honor, but none more deserving than Deryl. He has shown that hard work and determination can pay off with improved performance. He improved in every category from a year ago — offense, defense, rebounding — and was a big factor in the Wildcats improved play this year.

Even though Deryl didn't make the Phillips 66 team, he has made my "All Surprise Team," and I know there are a lot of people that would agree.

Abortion bill defines viability

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Opponents said an abortion bill before a Senate committee is a major step backwards, but supporters said they believe it upholds a woman's right to know.

The Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee heard testimony today on an abortion bill that extends the definition of fetus viability.

"The bill appears to ignore the fact that abortions are legal medical procedures in Kansas," Kristin Van Voorst, a lobbyist for Planned Parenthood, said.

Carol Graves, lobbyist for Kansans For Life, said she saw it differently.

"We view the issue as primarily the woman's right to know and make an informed decision," she said.

The bill's provision include:

—Requiring women to wait 24 hours after consenting to an abortion before the procedure is performed.

—Redefining the term viable to include the stage of development when the life of the fetus may be continued by artificial life support systems.

—Mandating reporting of all abortions including a statement from the physician of why the abortion was not a crime and whether the spouse was notified.

—Banning the use of birth control pills, intrauterine devices and Norplant, a surgically implanted birth control device.

Sen. Todd Tiahrt, R-Goddard, sponsored the bill along with Sens. Mike Harris, R-Wichita, and Phil Martin, D-Pittsburg.

Tiahrt said the bill would place a value on human life.

He said life has no value in many communities where gang members are shooting each other for minor reasons.

"If everyone would treat life with value, we would not have to live in fear," Tiahrt said.

Kenda Bartlett, lobbyist for Concerned Women For America, said the bill would close loopholes in the law.

But Jenifer Brandeberry, lobbyist for the ProChoice Action League, said the bill is a closet attempt to ban all abortions in Kansas.

She urged the committee to reject the bill and continue to respect women's rights.

Van Voorst said the bill is unconstitutional because the 24-hour waiting period places an undue burden on women who often must travel away from home for abortions. The provision would require them to spend extra time away from home.

The committee plans to continue to hear testimony Thursday.

Slow pace leads Cats to success

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

ORLANDO, Fla. — Maybe the Florida sun — mixed in with an NCAA Tournament game and a whole lot of adrenaline — has gotten to the Cats, prompting them to talk candidly about their K-State careers.

The story of K-State's Cinderella season has been, without question, defense.

K-State finished its first NCAA Tournament season since 1990 giving up an average of just 67.4 points per game, top in the Big Eight.

"We're 17-2 when we've held our opponents under 70 points," Cats coach Dana Altman said. "When they've gotten over 70, we're 2-8."

"If the score at halftime is in the 40s or 50s, we're in trouble."

Indeed, Altman has preached all season that a blue-collar defense is what has this team where it is today.

But had you asked the Wildcat team a few years ago what to expect from K-State, a defensive workhouse probably wouldn't have come to mind.

"Truthfully, when I came to K-State, I thought we were going to run up and down the court," Aaron Collier said. "With the type of athletes we had, I thought we would run a lot more."

Collier was one of those athletes. He came from State Fair Community College, where he was the team's leading scorer for two years in a row. In his sophomore year, he averaged 23.4 points a game.

"But right now we're winning with this kind of tempo," he said. "So, I can't complain."

Senior Vincent Jackson averaged 21.3 points a game in his last year at Moberly Junior College and came to K-State, like Collier, for the 1991-92 season. He, too, said he expected a fast-paced, run-and-gun type of offense.

"That's the whole reason I came here," he said. "That's my game. I came to K-State to play an up-tempo game."

The list goes on.

Junior center Deryl Cunningham, a McDonald's high-school all-American who averaged 18 points a game his senior year, said much the same thing.

"That's what they told me we were going to do," he said. "I was kind of frustrated because I know there isn't a center in the country that can run up and down the court with me."

So, why the change of plans?

"We had five or six guys that were playing," Altman said. "We just had to figure out a way to win basketball games. And that gave us the best chance."

Tulane recovers from scandal, takes on K-State in first round

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

ORLANDO, Fla. — The Wildcats play their first NCAA Tournament game in more than three years today, battling the Tulane Green Wave at 1:50 p.m. (CST) at the Orlando Arena in Orlando, Fla.

K-State will play the second of four games in the Southeast regional.

"It's great to be here in Florida," K-State coach Dana Altman said. "But after watching Tulane on tape the last couple of days, I'm not really excited about playing them."

The Green Wave is making its second tournament appearance in as many years.

But it wasn't too long ago that the Tulane basketball program was given up for dead. Or, rather, was dead.

In 1988, Tulane coach Perry Clark was hired to pull the Green Wave out of the wake of a scandal-rocked basketball team.

Tulane administrators dismantled the Green Wave basketball program after a 1985 point-shaving scandal left the university in shock. There wouldn't be a basketball team at Tulane for three seasons, and when Clark came to the school, there wasn't as much as a basketball for his team.

The Green Wave basketball team moved into an old volleyball office and called it home.

"A lot of people don't see what we've been through," Green Wave senior Anthony Reed said.

"I took a big chance when I came here."

In the 1989-90 season, when Reed was a freshman, Tulane was 4-24. A year later, the Green Wave improved to 15-13.

Last season, Tulane made its first trip to the NCAA Tournament and finished the season with a 22-9 overall mark.

Then there's this season.

With the Green Wave basketball program on the rise and sporting a No. 17 preseason ranking, Tulane suffered yet another blow — last season's leading scorer and second-leading rebounder Kim Lewis broke his leg in the second game and was lost for the season.

But Tulane rallied behind Reed's 16 points- and 6.9-rebounds-per-game average to finish the season with a 21-8 mark.

"If I had to do it all over again," Reed said, "I'd do the same thing again."

Reed has been the leader this season, leading the team in rebounding, blocks and points. He's a big guy — 6 feet 9 inches, 220 pounds — with a good shooting touch — a team-high 32 three-pointers.

"He's a fine player," Altman said. "He's scored a lot of points, not only this year, but in his career."

Reed is Tulane's all-time leading scorer with 1,853 points.

It may not be Reed who is K-State's biggest nemesis in today's game, but Tulane's faster pace. The Green Wave plays a lot of full-court defense and likes to run on opponents, while K-State's slower-paced, half-court game keeps scores in lower figures.

"We love a disco pace," Perry said. "But if we have to waltz, we'll waltz. We want to go up and down the court, but we're prepared to play any type of game."

"We match up very well with them," he said. "We both get a lot off of our defense. We both rebound. We both play hard."

"They're a team that is the toughest type of team to prepare for," Perry said. "You can't say, 'We shut this guy down, and we win.' They always find someone new to step up every game."

"The difference between our teams is, they're hot. They are hot right now, and we're not playing good basketball."

Zone defenses have given Tulane fits lately, as the Green Wave has shot just 39 percent from the floor in its past five games — four of which have been losses.

"We've seen more zones than Jerry Rice," Perry said. "We just haven't shot the ball well, and I think we'll play some zone against K-State."

But K-State's defensive forte is man-to-man.

"I don't think we can do something different than what we've done all year," Altman said. "We're going to go in with thoughts of playing man-to-man."

That high-intensity man defense, Altman said, is what has made his basketball team ugly. Successful, mind you, but ugly.

"This game has a chance to be really ugly," he said. "Tulane can be ugly sometimes, and we're ugly regardless."

"I don't think the TV people will be standing in line to put this one on."

K-State answers the bell

It's all come down to this. Sixty-four teams take part in 32 games during the next two days, and our own K-State Wildcats made the cut.

To paraphrase pitching great Dizzy Dean — who woulda thunk it?

This was a team that had come off a one below .500 season and one just above .500 season in the first two years of Dana Altman's tenure.

Altman was rumored to be on the way out, and questions abounded about the personnel. Could Anthony Beane cut it at point guard in Big Eight play? Could Deryl Cunningham step up his game after a disappointing season? Could Ski Jones regain his pre-broken-ankle form?

The first few games didn't do a whole lot to answer those questions.

An overtime victory over Ohio wasn't exactly what the NCAA selection committee labeled a "quality win."

A slim win over UMKC, followed by losses at Wichita State and Nevada, had fans — including this one — saying maybe this team did deserve its preseason pick as seventh in the conference.

Then it happened. The "Cardiac Cats" began to get things on track with a win at California-Santa Barbara's infamous "Thunderdome."

From there, wins at Oklahoma State and Nebraska helped start the Big Eight season, and the Cats were solidly in second place before their Big Monday battle with KU in Bramlage.

Along the way, the questions began to get answered. Yes, Anthony Beane was the man the Cats needed at point guard as he consistently delivered.

Yes, Deryl Cunningham could step up his game, becoming one of the conference's leaders in offensive rebounds.

And although a shooting slump hung over him early in the season, Ski Jones began to play like the "superfrosh" he was when he appeared at the U.S. Sports Festival.

As for the "Altman isn't going to make it past this season" rumor mill, those thoughts were squelched quickly when K-State began to win.

A midseason slump took a little from the luster of the accomplishments of this team, with losses to Nebraska, Colorado, Oklahoma State and Kansas down the stretch.

But, they played through and came away winners when it mattered — the Big Eight Tournament last weekend.

When it wasn't certain whether an NCAA berth was solid, the Cats delivered with a heart-stopping win over Nebraska as Ski Jones hit a put-back with three-tenths of a second left.

Then they captured the berth by out-Jayhawking Kansas. The Cats played with the composure that had been a trademark of Roy Williams' ballclubs, while the Hawks lost it.

Sure, that Big Eight title would have been nice, but a much bigger one is up for grabs beginning today.

And even though the odds for K-State to win the national title are very slim, these Cats are champions in my book.

They answered questions about themselves and their team when they had to. The Cats didn't complain about a lack of talent, but instead out-hustled the opponent. And they put excitement back into K-State basketball.

Monday's headline in this section read "The Cinderella Season." A friend of mine commented that he wasn't sure this team was a Cinderella.

He felt the label belonged more with teams like Rider and George Washington.

But after seeing and hearing what was expected of this team to begin the year, and seeing what they've accomplished, I say the glass slipper fits, no matter what happens this weekend in Orlando.

TROY COVERDALE

Florida St. looks for consistency

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ORLANDO, Fla. — Charlie Ward thinks all the talk about Florida State's inconsistency is just that. Coach Pat Kennedy hopes he's right.

"When we won 13 out of 14, nobody said anything. But since we lost two out of our last three, people say we are inconsistent," Ward said on the eve of Thursday's first-round NCAA tournament game against Evansville.

"Teams are better prepared later on in the season, and there is nothing you can do about that," Ward added.

"All we can do is play hard and hope for the best."

Florida State (22-9) is a possible K-State opponent in the second round of the tournament

Saturday.

The Seminoles are seeded third in the Southeast Regional but have lost three of its last four games, including a 12-point loss to Clemson in the opening round of the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament.

Injuries, including Ward's dislocated left shoulder, have been a factor but so has the Seminoles' shooting.

A decent 3-point shooting team most of the season, FSU has made only 12 of 64 (.187 percent) in the past four games.

"That's just part of the game of basketball," Sam Cassell, Ward's backcourt mate, said of the Seminoles' apparent inconsistency.

"We try to play hard every night, but the ball is not going to fall for you all of the time."

ARTS

Staying in touch at Spring Dance

STEPHANIE HOELZEL

Collegian

Emotional experiences put into modern dance. That is how Maria Ferguson develops her dance pieces.

Ferguson, a 1982 graduate of K-State, created and choreographed a segment of this year's Spring Dance '93. She pulled excerpts of her master's thesis concert for the production, she said.

"My concert is about relationships and staying in touch with people. I called it 'Out of Order-Out of Touch.' For Spring Dance, I chose to use a suite from my concert. The suite has a duet and two solo dances," Ferguson said.

It is important dancers put together something they are comfortable performing, she said.

She auditioned students for the parts in her sequence.

"I was very lucky — I found two very talented individuals to perform my piece. They are both very good at improvisation, and that is an important element in my pieces," Ferguson said.

Three years ago, Luke Kahlich, professor of speech, started asking K-State graduates to contribute to the Spring Dance program.

"Luke asked me to come back, and I thought it would be a great opportunity to use a part of my concert and to work with dancers," she said.

Achmed Valk, assistant professor of speech, said he feels bringing alumni back to help with Spring Dance helps undergraduate students see the results of the dance program at K-State.

"We like to bring back graduates from our program who have made a mark and feature their work as a guest artist. It sets a good example for the undergraduate students and shows them what motivation and hard work can do for them," he said.

Ferguson was a member of the Susan Warden Dancers from 1985 to 1990. The dance company began in Manhattan and later moved to Kansas City.

"I joined after the company had moved to Kansas City. Dancing for them provided me with great experience. It helped me to decide what I really wanted to do in terms of dance," she said.

Ferguson is a Manhattan native and is currently finishing her Master of Fine Arts degree at the University of Colorado at Boulder.

The Kansas State Repertory Dance Company will present Spring Dance '93 at 8:00 p.m. April 1 and 2 in McCain Auditorium.

labor workers and academics wanted to even their chances in the workplace.

The organization's stated purpose in 1966 was "to take action to bring women into full participation in the mainstream of American society now, exercising all the privileges and responsibilities thereof in truly equal partnership with men."

Their long-term goals in 1966 included passage of the Equal Rights Amendment, improved daycare standards, legalized abortion and the end of sexism.

The state of Kansas NOW board adopts an agenda of goals each year. The 1993 agenda focuses on reproductive rights, diversity (in areas of political activity), lesbian and gay issues, and NOW's organization and development.

"There will be a lot of press coverage for the speech because I don't think she's publicly speaking anywhere else in Kansas," Cora Shown, director of University Relations for ESU, said.

Change in tempo key to Cats' success

Blowout losses showed things had to change, but they didn't.

"Last year, we had a lot of players who pretty much focused on offense," Collier said. "They were trying to score more than the next guy. This year, we just haven't had a lot of head cases like we had last year."

It was so bad Collier was one of three Wildcats to quit the team. Hamilton Strickland and Gaylon Nickerson were the other two who threatened to leave. Nickerson followed through.

But what wasn't reported then was a fourth Wildcat, Jackson, contemplated leaving K-State.

"But when Aaron decided to stay," Jackson said, "I knew things would be all right. And like Aaron said, we're winning with this tempo. I'll stick with it."

Experience as teacher helpful to house mom

Duncan said being a teacher for three years at a high school in New Zealand, coupled with her knowledge and training in human sexuality, she is able to do a good job of being a house mother.

"It's fun. I teach them basic etiquette," she said.

Schneider said though she is a young person, she is in charge.

"She is in control. She knows how to hold her own," he said.

He said she helps the students with their academic work when the need arises, in addition to giving medication when they are sick.

"She understands the problems that college students face," Schneider said.

Duncan said although she has a different accent she is proficient in English, as that is one of the languages spoken in her country.

She said she has discovered there are differences with the names of some things in the United States. Duncan said in New Zealand they mostly say rubber and rubbish while here, it is eraser and trash, respectively.

Schneider said though she has a different accent there is hardly any difference when she speaks.

Duncan said all members of the fraternity ensure she is properly taken care of.

"They look after me," she said.

In addition to being a house mother, she is a graduate teaching assistant and has represented her department at conferences where she made presentations on behalf of K-State, she said.

"There are lots of opportunities here," she said.

She has been able to use her exposure in the different clubs and organizations to enrich her professional and academic life, Duncan said.

She said she missed the beach and her native food, especially cheese, but being here is an invaluable learning experience.

"I love the summers here. But I don't like the snow. I have never been so cold all my life," she said.

Duncan said after completing her studies, she would love to work for the United Nations in the area of reproductive health in the Third World.

LEGISLATURE

DUI legislation argued

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Supporters and foes debated the merits today of lowering the threshold for drunk driving in Kansas to .08 percent blood alcohol content before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Proponents of reducing the level at which a person is considered legally drunk from .10 percent argued the step is a logical progression in the battle to get drunk drivers off the highway.

"The DUI legislation...will go far in addressing needed strategies to reduce the drunk driving tragedies in our state," said Wanda Stewart of El Dorado, regional director of Mothers Against Drunk Driving.

"Kansas has made tremendous gains, and your leadership is needed to continue the fight against drunk driving."

However, opponents said lowering the blood alcohol content level will divert resources from getting the truly drunk and habitual drunk drivers off the road.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

DEAR CASSANDRA,

You've got to help me. My boyfriend is driving me crazy. He watches sports constantly. If we go out for dinner, it has to be a restaurant that has a television. He has to have the chair that faces the television so he won't miss a moment of basketball, football or whatever is on.

It's difficult trying to have a romantic date with someone who would rather watch monster truck-racing than have a conversation. He'd rather watch sports than movies, sitcoms or anything. He'd flip past 10 great movies to watch a junior-high-school girls basketball game. I'm serious.

Don't get me wrong — I like sports, too. I enjoy going to games and watching an occasional game on television. But his sports addiction is beginning to drive a wedge in our relationship. I've joked about it, bitched about it and tried to have a serious talk with him about it, but nothing seems to work.

Cass, what should I do?

Sincerely,

Sports Widow

DEAR WIDOW,

You are not alone. The next time you are eating at a restaurant, look around the dining room. You'll probably notice a dozen other women whose boyfriends display the same symptoms as your beau.

It is a mystery why so many men (and, in fairness, some women) are compelled to absorb so much sports. Perhaps, they derive some sort of vicarious enjoyment of watching other, non-sedentary people engaging in some sort of physical activity.

You need to compromise with your boyfriend. Obviously, he loves watching sports and has a right to do so. But no one should have to play second fiddle to a television. This is simply rude behavior. Tell him as much. If his rude date behavior persists, turn down his next date offer.

If he would rather watch a game than spend time with you, let him. Before you get up and go home, tell him he can call you after the game is over and that if he is lucky, you won't have other plans. He should get the message.

Letters to Cassandra may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie 116, Manhattan, Kan. 66506.

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content for the purpose of conserving space. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open to the public. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be maintained in the strictest confidence.

Automobile maintenance important before traveling

KRISTI HUMSTON
Collegian

The reservations are made, and the suitcases are packed, but have you checked to make sure your vehicle is ready for your spring break trip?

Richard Gray, owner of Gray's Westloop Service, said it is a good idea to check tires, under-the-hood fluid levels and wiper blades before leaving on a trip.

"With cars today, it's hard to tell you how to stuff a toolbox," Gray said.

However, he said a spare tire and a jack are good to have along, regardless of the type of car.

In case you are stalled along the road, taking a safety device to warn oncoming traffic is recommended. Reflectors and flares are commonly used.

In the event your car does stall along the road, Terry Maple, a public information officer with the Kansas Highway Patrol, said to get off the roadway, if possible, and turn on the emergency flashers.

Staying inside the car is also suggested because other drivers might not be able to see people. When someone comes along and offers help, roll down the window and ask if the person will call someone for you.

As a rule of thumb, Gray said it is a good idea to contact someone who is a certified technician. This indicates the technician is knowledgeable about auto mechanics. He said most auto clubs are good and reliable.

Dealerships can usually recommend someone if they cannot do the job, he said.

"You're at the mercy of what's there and what's available," Gray said.

Travelers should also be aware of car-jacking, the latest form of stealing cars. To avoid this, Maple suggested staying in well-lit places and keeping car doors locked. If approached by someone who tries to take your car, Maple said to avoid arguing with the person.

"The car can be replaced," Maple said. "You can't."

As far as the actual trip is concerned, Maple said it is important to remember that regardless of where you are going, you still have to go through Kansas. Therefore, keep an eye on the weather before leaving and before coming back.

When on the road, be careful and drive defensively and courteously. Maple said this includes wearing a seatbelt while traveling and having a designated driver if you are going out to party.

"Make sure you get there and make it home so you can go back next year," Maple said.

FRIDAY

Weather causes cancellation of trip

JULIE CORBIN
Collegian

Snow in Florida, tornadoes in Georgia and flooding and mudslides in Colorado. Not your normal spring break weather.

As spring break finally stepped within reach, meteorologists threw up their hands in despair as day after day brought more unforecasted weather.

Planes were delayed, and people were stranded across the nation as students and professionals tried to make it back to where they started.

"This weekend was pretty crazy. Parents were calling in worried about where their kids were and if they were OK. Their kids were fine. They were just stranded in airports around the country," said Kellie Sherman, representative from Student Travel Services in New York. "They just had to be patient and wait it out."

However, unless we get hit by another big storm, K-State students will not have to worry about waiting.

"There will be no effects on their plans. The storm has worked itself out," Bob Pearson, travel agent from K-State Travel, said.

"The airlines have gotten all their equipment in the right place and in working order. There were airplanes stuck all over everywhere, but everything is back to normal, scheduling-wise."

One ill effect of the storm for students was the cancellation of a trip to the Smoky Mountains, a mountain range that forms the border between Tennessee and North Carolina. The trip was sponsored by UPC Travel.

As of late Tuesday morning, the trip was canceled because of the threat of more rain and snowfall.

Program adviser Jennifer Lee said she had been trying to reach the park by telephone since Monday to find out conditions but always got a busy signal.

"We finally got ahold of the Elkmont Sheriff Department, a nearby town, and found out that they were in the process of evacuating thousands of people because of the fear of flooding," Lee said.

"In the interest of the safety of the students, we can't send them into a disaster."

Students who had paid for the trip were contacted by telephone and refunded for the amount of the trip by a University check.

The other spring break trip to Daytona Beach, Fla. sponsored by UPC Travel, is still on.

"We've had a few students come in with a little concern, but by the time we get down there it may still have some after effects, such as being damp, but everything will be cleared off. We'll be further south than where the big storm hit," Charla Bailey, program adviser, said.

It looks as if K-State will have a break from bad weather next week. Pearson said students should go ahead with their vacations and enjoy it.

"Everything's copacetic. Go and have fun," Pearson said.

Ireland speaks on women's involvement

WENDY BARRETT

The Kanza Room of Emporia State University's Memorial Union was filled with more than 300 people Thursday night as Patricia Ireland, president of the National Organization for Women, spoke about the power of women in the '90s.

Her speech focused on the growing number of women involved in changing the U.S.

government. She talked about NOW's involvement in governmental policy changes and expressed her excitement regarding the appointment of Janet Reno.

"There is a very wonderful excitement in Washington that has been there since the November election," Ireland said.

The excitement stems from years of feminist activism in the Washington area and lots of hard work from dedicated feminists, she said.

Ireland spoke briefly about the growing number of NOW supporters across the country. She said it is important to realize the progress NOW has made and to celebrate the victories.

"One hundred percent of the women in Congress are pro-choice and 25 percent of the women are of color. I think it is so important to our cause that the government is becoming diversified and recognizing the strength of women," Ireland said.

She spoke at length about last week's death in Florida of an abortion doctor. She has confronted leader's of Operation Rescue and said the war on abortion is getting bloody.

"There is a real fear involved

El Salvador and Belgium are represented at K-State by one student each. Both students have expressed how challenging and rewarding life at K-State has been for them, even though they are the only student from their country.

Evelyn Dimas, graduate student in food science from El Salvador, said she has been very happy with the academics at K-State. She said specifically K-State offers a very good program in food science.

"The teachers are really good. Excellent teachers," she said.

Fanny Vanwinge, graduate student in sociology from Belgium, said life at K-State was exciting when she was having classes, but now that she is only working on her thesis things are boring.

She said she came to K-State because the tuition was reasonable in comparison to some other universities.

"The tuition is not bad in comparison to other places in the U.S.," she said.

Dimas said she was lonely during her first year at K-State, but she has overcome that by getting involved with the Institute of Food Technologists, the Food Science Club and the Latin American Student Organization.

She said through the help and encouragement of her academic adviser, she has been to a number of conferences sponsored by these organizations.

Vanwinge said she is a member of the International Club and participates in some of the social activities which are planned.

Even with these extracurricular activities, she

STEINEGER APPOINTED TO BOARD OF REGENTS

SHAWN BRUCE
Collegian

Gov. Joan Finney announced yesterday the appointment of Jack Steineger of Kansas City to the Kansas Board of Regents, effective immediately.

He replaces Ruth Schrum of Manhattan who withdrew her name from consideration on March 4. Critics faulted Schrum's qualifications for the board, calling her nomination a purely political act by Finney.

Steineger, a former state senator and 1949 KU graduate, must be confirmed by the Kansas Senate. If confirmed, he will serve a term that expires Dec. 31, 1996.

BRITT FINED, SENTENCED TO SIX MONTHS

TOPEKA (AP) — The first of eight people convicted in a scheme to provide false documentation to illegal aliens was sentenced to six months in prison and fined $20,000.

Barbra Britt, 35, of Manhattan, was sentenced Thursday by senior U.S. District Judge Dale Saffels, who also ordered three years of probation after the prison term.

Britt, a produce farmer, pleaded guilty in December 1992 to conspiracy to violate the 1986 Immigration Reform and Control Act. She had agreed to provide false documentation to illegal aliens seeking temporary residence status in the United States. To get such status, aliens need to prove they have done seasonal agriculture work for at least 90 days.

U.S. Attorney Lee Thompson of Wichita said the other defendants will be sentenced during the next several weeks. They include three other Kansas produce farmers and five people who brokered or attempted to broker false employment documentation.

COMMENTS

"The smoke was so intense, I couldn't see the flames, and it was driving people out the windows. I thought I had to jump, too."

— Minnie Byrd, a resident of the four-story Chicago hotel where a fire killed 15, including three who jumped to their deaths.

"I wanted to be here when she came out. I couldn't stand another night of walking the floor. I'm going to take her home, feed her well and turn the heat up."

— Jill Kelly, mother of 15-year-old Jennifer Makenzie, one of the Bloomfield Hills, Mich., students lifted by helicopter from the snowbound Great Smoky Mountains and carried to safety in Tennessee on Tuesday.

"It was like a massive earthquake. I was buried under bricks. I screamed and screamed. I don't know how long I screamed. Then I lost consciousness. I woke up and screamed again, and that time the screaming brought help. My father who was sitting beside me is dead."

— Abdul Hussein, an 18-year-old survivor of the bomb blast in Calcutta, India, on Wednesday.

"As soon as the highways open, I'm out of here. I don't care if I have to dig the whole parking lot out."

— Chris McCade, a student from Wayne State University in Detroit, stranded at a Charleston, W.Va., hotel on his way to spring break in Key West, Fla.

Weekend uncovers plot to suppress race results; staff resigns in disgrace

Here's the story the Collegian was afraid to tell you: Jeff King won the Iditarod sled dog race in record time at 12:39 a.m. Wednesday.

Who knows why the Collegian was paralyzed by such fear? Who knows why anyone does anything?

But, taking advantage of the little-used 1933 Freedom of Information & Dog Sled Racing Results Act, Weekend uncovered the news that King covered the 1,100 miles of the Alaskan race in a record time of 10 days, 15 hours and 38 minutes. The race began in Anchorage on March 6.

The Iditarod, the most underrated racing event in the history of underrated races, has been run for 21 years and pays tribute to a 1925 sled relay of diphtheria serum to Nome, Alaska, in the midst of an epidemic.

See, you learned something today.

Mr. Rogers, we have pictures of you and Daniel Tiger smooching

Does anyone out there not like Mr. Rogers?

A little too nice of a guy, perhaps? We think he's the anti-Christ.

Well, even if he's not the anti-Christ (maybe the world's nicest anti-Christ?), Fred Rogers has been repeatedly taking off and putting on his blue canvas sneakers and his nice zip-up cardigan for 25 years now.

In his honor, Pittsburgh mayor Sophie Masloff declared last Tuesday "Mister Rogers' Neighborhood Day."

Rogers, 64, was born in Latrobe, Penn., (where, incidentally, Rolling Rock brand beer is brewed. That's it! He's a drunk! We knew it!) and has been doing his "Neighborhood" business since 1968. Eight million kids, who should be watching old Yogi Bear cartoons, tune in each week. Talk about a cult.

Fred also bears no hatred for those who spoof his quiet, smiley manner. Although most are good-natured, he said, "there's some that are more whimsical than others."

He then made the startling confession that he sniffs a tremendous amount of glue before each show.

OK, he really didn't say that.

Yum, pass me another bowl of that delicious flour!

For the last 50 years, in hiding places across Britain, the government has had nearly 200,000 tons of food squirreled away. They did this just in case all the British Pink Floyd fans simultaneously got a case of the marijuana-induced "munchies."

OK, not really.

Actually they did this as a precautionary measure brought on by the Cold War.

But now, with every being good chums and all sorts of good-natured back slapping going on between nations, there's really no need for such a stockpile. So, the British government is giving the food away.

Yes, if you are interested in succulent groceries such as mouthwatering flour, delectable fat and fluoride-hating sugar, the line forms here.

But it's perfectly legal for a horse to trip a human

Because legislators around the nation care so very, very deeply about our lives, armless motorists will not have to pay tolls on the New Jersey Turnpike nor will horses in California ever have to live in fear of being tripped.

While some are made in serious earnestness and others are made with tongue strategically inserted in cheek, there are some weird bills being introduced in every state of the Union.

Take, for example, New York Assemblyman John Behan who, after four years, is still trying to make the Labrador retriever the official dog of New York state.

Or how about the Nevada law that would protect real estate agents from being sued for not telling prospective buyers that someone once died of natural causes in the house.

SPRING BREAK

Enough Said.

THE TWENTIES TOLL

STORY BY STEPHANIE FUQUA LAYOUT BY DEANNA ADAMS

WARNING: The following article will not please people who get drunk every weekend, smoke like furnaces, don't exercise and fake-bake 'till their eyeballs turn brown.

But they should read it anyway.

Yes, we've all read (and ignored) how bad all that stuff is for your body. But read this, because what you do to your body now will affect you 30 years down the road.

"The typical diseases — Alzheimers, cancer, cardiovascular — don't usually start making inroads until the 50s, 60s, 70s," Larry Williams, associate professor of biology, said. "In terms of cardiovascular disease and cancer, you can do a lot of things in your twenties to speed up the process."

However, the obvious aging signals won't be seen until later.

"You don't see too many signs of aging, but you can do things to contribute to it," Williams said.

One thing that contributes to physical signs of aging is tanning.

"Cancer is related to mutations and exposure to carcinogens. Too much sunlight — a lot of students are going basking on the beaches, and that contributes to skin cancer later on," Williams said. "By continually frying your skin, you are increasing your chances. Just basking yourself out is not, in the long run, good."

Drinking alcohol in moderation doesn't effect aging much, Williams said.

But compare his definition of moderation and the typical student's definition, and you're comparing apples and oranges.

"If you're drunk once a week, that's excess. If you're even drunk once a month, that's excess," Williams said.

Smoking is something else that speeds up the aging process.

"I don't think people who are into heavy smoking realize it pushes up the problems you have before dying. They'll have the lung problems, the breathing of a 70-year-old when they're 50," Williams said.

Carol Ann Holcomb, associate professor of foods and nutrition, is conducting a study that looks at the relationship between exercise, smoking, and the ability to cope with stressors, and how those affect nutrient intake in women.

She said the amount of exercise people get and whether they smoke can really affect the amount of nutrition their bodies get.

"We've found the more active people are, the better their nutritional intake — they have a much more adequate intake of nutrients," Holcomb said.

"We've also found women who are smokers have much poorer diets."

The precursors of chronic disease are present in young adults, Holcomb said.

"Over 50 percent of the factors that affect chronic disease and premature death are smoking, diet, choices of food and physical activity levels," she said. "A person who has positive health behaviors early in life, the possibility of reaching full potential in terms of time, is much, much greater."

David Dziewaltowski, associate professor of kinesiology, said only 10-20 percent of the population between the ages of 18 and 65 exercises at an effective level.

"The behaviors of a 20-year-old, by not participating, are going to affect what the health is in the 40s, 50s, 60s," Dziewaltowski said.

Some disease, such as arteriosclerosis and osteoporosis, are directly related to people's activities in their 20s.

"The predisposition to a heart attack is directly related to the attitudes of a 20-year-old. If they exercise, eat a low fat diet, the risk is lower," Dziewaltowski said.

"For osteoporosis, there is less bone mass. It is especially a problem for women. They are gaining bone mass throughout their development in young adulthood. If you don't exercise, don't have proper nutrition, it puts you at risk," Dziewaltowski said.

Proper nutrition, exercise and not smoking, drinking or tanning all will help the aging process later on in life. But Rick Miller, assistant professor of human development and family studies, said mental health also is important.

"One of the things they can do is develop a healthy social lifestyle, having a good group of friends, taking care of their mental health," Miller said.

"The best predictions of how they'll do later in life is how they do early in life. A person who's unhappy in their 80s was unhappy in their 20s. You can't say, 'I'm going to be a slob and a bum for 20 years and then I'm going to change.'"

A healthy family background is important for good mental health.

"Partially, it is just becoming aware of what your background is. The patterns you grew up with. You don't have a choice if you don't know what they are. If you're not aware, you're stuck. Counseling is making people aware so they can make choices," Miller said.

Healthy friendships also are important for mental health.

"It's not necessarily having a lot of friends, but having healthy friendships that are not needy or dependent," Miller said. "It's becoming aware of the patterns of what friends you associate with. If you are always rescuing people or taking care of their problems. Basically if it's reciprocal or not. It's taking turns."

Finally, a good relationship with parents is essential.

"Part of the process of becoming an adult is the relationship with your parents. It's a gradual transformation. You quit being a child and become an adult. It's seeing your parents as human beings instead of the person to give you the car keys," Miller said.

"Developing a new, closer relationship with the parent is a big part of becoming an adult. You can't get married and have a good relationship with your spouse if you have a bad relationship with your parents."

Give us hard facts, Bill, and don't try to soothe us with folly.

THE ISSUE

President Clinton seems to be making outrageous promises concerning cuts in military spending.

Bill Clinton loves to talk. He also loves to make promises. Promises he may not be able to keep.

With the Cold War over, Clinton now plans on making some very serious cuts in military spending.

Fine.

The problem is that behind every M-16 is a factory full of American workers.

Fine, Clinton has said. He has promised to help workers and cities specifically hurt by cuts in military budgets and by a recent round of military base closings.

He backs up this promise with a five-year plan that will call for a "defense conversion" budget of $19.6 billion. The intent of this budget is to help those who have been hurt by layoffs and plant closings.

Republicans are upset, seeing the promises as a scam to cover up massive cuts the Clinton administration is making in military spending.

However, both sides may be missing the bigger picture. What specifically will become of the thousands of workers who will be affected by the cuts?

Clinton is promising jobs. Yet, no clear plan has been presented as to where they will come from.

Relief is fine. The average worker, however, wants work, not relief.

Talk is quite expensive, and when the bills come due, they may be paid with American jobs.

TRUTH

"Men will wrangle for religion; write for it; fight for it; die for it; anything but live for it."
— Charles Caleb Colton

"One religion is as true as another."
— Robert Burton

I'm sure all of you out there are damned tired of all the networks interrupting "Beverly Hills 90210" to bring you up-to-the-minute reports on World War III taking place in Waco, Texas. I'll bet, however, that nobody is aware of the following stories that have not made their way into the mass media. Fortunately for all of you, I have been keeping a relentless vigil on all forms of communication known to humans in order to bring you the following special reports, hot off an electronic mail bulletin board:

SHAWN WOODFORD

March 9

A spokesman for the Clinton White House announced this evening that it had authorized the deployment of a squadron of B-52s to be on standby over Waco, Texas, "just in case." He further stated, "we want to be sure that this Jesus freak doesn't gain the upper hand. We have it on good intel that he has several baptismal fronts and, you know, ... some of that funny thin bread that he could throw at the gallant men of the FBI."

The Clinton spokesman went on to state, "the 52s aren't carrying bombs." When pressed further by members of the press, he admitted, "Well, the bombs aren't fused ... well, they're not armed ... well, they are armed, but we wouldn't use them, you know."

"What?" I hear you say, "B-52s to deal with grandmas wielding .50 caliber machine guns and 10-year-olds with civilian-style, legally purchased, semi-automatic AR-15s easily converted to automatic fire?" Well, according to the next story, the cult members might obtain a significant upgrade in their firepower capability.

March 10 — Army officials are alarmed that the "Von Klumt" railway gun appears to be missing from the Aberdeen Proving Grounds Armor Museum. Several of the high-explosive and armor-piercing shells also appear to be missing. Highly placed officials of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms are concerned that the Waco Christian Defense Front may have stolen it in an attempt to raise the siege of the "Waco 100."

"When contacted at his Virginia Hunt country home, Oliver North denied the rumor that he masterminded and financed the relief effort. 'I have a lot of experience in this kind of stuff,' North said, 'but I just don't have the time right now.'"

Serbian military advisers are also reported to be on the way to observe the tactics used to flush out the cult members. "Ethnic cleansing hell," a Serbian officer was reported to have said. "We just want to watch the pros."

It's good to know that within the sanity of everyday life in 1990s America, millions of dollars are being spent each day to deal with 100 deeply dedicated and highly motivated religious aficionados in Waco. But this situation begs the question, "What if the Feds just packed up all of the helicopters, tanks and SWAT teams, and just went home?"

When things cool down, then they could send in a few religious scholars that speak Koresh's language, rather than a hoard of BATF agents who think they are re-creating Desert Storm and PEACEFULLY bring about an end to Armageddon in Texas. The Feds could then throw Koresh and whoever they decide killed the four BATF agents (probably the 10-year-olds with the AR-15s) into a rathole and the BATF could plan its next D-Day assault on Claire Elizabeth Prophet's fortified Church of Enlightenment and Truth in Montana (now THAT ought to be fun).

Or else they could just call in the B-52s and let God sort everything out.

Walden by the airport

TOM LISTER

Richard — At 2:30 in the morning this column looks a little strange to me. Maybe it'll look different in the morning. — TL

A friend told me once that today's societal problems stem from the fact that nobody ever gets outdoors anymore. We're all getting cabin fever from the concrete and steel, he explained.

The other night, hearing this advice repeat itself, I decided to go for a jog near the airport. It worked. Exercise and nature both help you focus on something other than the constant assault of pop culture.

Natural smells of burnt wood and cow manure drifted through the air along the road, and I tried to recall some vague notion of Thoreau in the back of my head.

From what I understand, Thoreau went for that same outdoor focus. For two years, he lived on the edge of a pond with only the bare necessities. No dope, no Hustlers. Just a man in God's country with a few vegetables in the ground.

Thoreau built his own house on the edge of Walden. And the clothes he wore looked outdated. Everything, he tried to explain, would go out of style at some time. He felt no need to coincide his views or appearance with those popular at the time.

I ran farther.

Near the intersection of Skyway and Recreation drives, I found myself running past an adult video outlet. The outdoor sign offered even more than the flicks: beer, live strippers and seafood. It was Monday night, and the parking lot had more than a few cars.

I kept running, though I felt my neck crane back toward the evil place.

Strange, I thought. If I were plopped down on a bar stool, slurping brews and watching pornos, I wouldn't want to eat seafood. Maybe lasagna.

My feet hit the cracked asphalt harder, and I remembered I needed to get my breathing rhythm down. You've got to get a steady beat going when you run, but you can't let it be a conscious thing. Once you begin to think about how you breathe, you study the process too long and then you forget to do it.

My roommate had the new Hustler, I remembered. He had rushed through my doorway the night before and shoved the magazine, pages spread, into my hands.

"Look at that," he'd said, smiling.

"What?"

"Fake tits," he'd pointed out with Ross Perot precision. "Check 'em out."

True enough. The brunette by the swimming pool looked like she'd had oversized pool balls planted in her chest. I had swallowed hard and felt a little bad for her.

Back on Airport Road, I thought more of Thoreau. Like Elvis, it was a good thing Thoreau was dead.

If Thoreau had lived today, he wouldn't have built a house by Walden. No, he would've parked a Winnebago by the pond and called it a day. There would have been a satellite dish on the back, and instead of farming, Thoreau would have made rounds on the college lecture circuit.

In the 1990s, networking by the media and pop culture has pervaded every neck of the woods.

Creationists cannot offer hard facts for their theories

Editor,

What should we do, Patrick Maguire? You said that evolution is not a plausible theory because it is not reproducible. I presume that means you are on the creationists' side of the fence and have the belief that God created all.

I would be completely willing to believe your theory if you could do one thing: reproduce the results. Give God a call and see if he will create a new organism to unequivocally prove that we, and everything else, were molded by his hands. If necessary, I would even be willing to donate a rib for such a grand experiment. But, if the procedure doesn't work, I am not going to stop accepting evolution as the most feasible theory.

► TOILET PAPER

Boy, look at that big mess! Ha Ha Ha

Editor,

There was a strange occurrence in town on the night of March 16. Was it a flood, plague or UFO sighting? No, it was a blizzard of toilet tissue that struck Manhattan like an H-Bomb. Let's refer to it as the St. Patrick's Day toilet paper massacre.

Here I stand in front of my home and view the carnage of the massacre. There is garbage everywhere. I see it hanging from the trees, lying in the street and blowing across the fields.

I watch a young fraternity member with a rake, trying to walk on branches that were never meant to support his weight. The greeks are cleaning their yards up.

Well then, perhaps the giggling sorority will come back at a decent hour and scamper through my yard screaming while they pick up the paper they so joyously tossed about last night. No, they will not come and clean up, because I am the victim of a joke. This is funny, don't you see?

This is stupid, don't you see? You're making a mess in everyone's yard, and it just doesn't make any sense. Even if you don't have a yard, you still have to look at it, and honestly, it looks like crap. So, take a hint — the joke is only funny once.

Space station can lead to the saving of lives

Editor,

This is in response to the editorial on March 10 dealing with space station Freedom.

While understanding the concern about the cost overruns and project delays, I, for one, support immediate construction and deployment of Freedom. The benefits of medical research alone justify the project. Cures for AIDS, cancer and other diseases can be helped along with research in space.

My father has suffered through three bouts with cancer since 1989. His chemotherapy treatments had an indirect benefit from space research. I believe he wouldn't be here today without it.

The U.S. space program is not being conducted today with the idea of "staying ahead of those damn Russians," as you portrayed. If the staff of the Collegian would do a little research on the space program before writing Freedom's obituary, they would see that a Russian cosmonaut will be aboard space shuttle Discovery on a flight in November of this year.

Since NASA receives less than 1 percent of the total federal budget, I feel the investment in our future is worthwhile. If NASA cuts Freedom, look for more unemployment and education facilities to suffer. This includes K-State, which is involved in designing elements for Freedom and the space program in general.

KSU graduate is freed from political imprisonment

Editor,

Tadesse Kidane-Mariam is free! Tadesse was a cabinet minister in the previous Ethiopian government who was imprisoned for more than two years by the present authorities. He was never charged of any wrongdoing, the detention resulting of him being a ranking official in the previous government.

Tadesse has an M.A. in geography from K-State, and his freedom came in part because of the efforts of many hundreds of K-Staters.

Yesterday I received a letter from Tadesse notifying me that he was freed a week ago. On his behalf, I would like to thank all those who worked for his freedom.

Amnesty International Group 254, here in Manhattan and at K-State, organized petition drives that collected many hundreds of signatures. The petitions were sent to the Ethiopian government, reminding them of the illegal imprisonment of Tadesse Kidane-Mariam.

Thank you K-State. Through your efforts Tadesse Kidane-Mariam is free.

Missed opportunities spell doom for K-State

ORLANDO, Fla. — The odds finally caught up to the Wildcats.

After completing an improbable season of four overtime victories, seven wins in games decided by two points or less and a countless number of late-game heroics, K-State lost a nail-biter in the first round of the Southeast regional in the NCAA Tournament.

Tulane's 55-53 victory over the Cats at the Orlando Arena in Orlando, Fla., brought a slow, painful end to K-State's Cinderella season.

"We've been winning those games all year," Wildcat center Deryl Cunningham said. "I thought it was going to happen again."

It didn't.

K-State's four-point, second-half lead slipped away in the waning minutes of the game, and Tulane took advantage of its opportunities.

With 52.7 seconds to play, Tulane's Matt Greene got open under the basket and took a pass from Pointer Williams.

"I was just lurking the baseline," Greene said. "I crept up, and Williams saw me and got me the ball."

The two-point basket tied the game at 53-53, and Greene was fouled on the play. Greene came into the game with just a 52.6 free-throw percentage.

Swish.

Tulane took a 54-53 lead. The Wildcats had the ball with 52 seconds left and down by a point, a scenario that doesn't sound all that odd to any Wildcat fan.

K-State's Anthony Beane called a timeout with 21.1 seconds on the game clock and 14 seconds left on the shot clock.

Beane dished off to Jackson, who went around the right side and put up a short jumper with 11 seconds to play.

"Time was running out," Jackson said. "I just ran up and put up my best shot."

It fell short. As did Aaron Collier's follow-up tip. Tulane's Anthony Reed came down with the rebound.

Deryl Cunningham and Collier tied up Reed for a jump ball with 6.7 seconds left, but the possession arrow was in favor of the Green Wave.

"I didn't want to give them a chance to steal the ball," Reed said. "I really didn't know the possession arrow was in our favor. I just wanted to cover up the ball."

On Tulane's ensuing inbound pass, Jackson fouled LeVeldro Simmons, just a 60 percent free-throw shooter. His first freebie rattled around and went in, giving Tulane a 55-53 lead.

But he missed the second, and Cunningham got the rebound. K-State chose not to use its final timeout, and DC kicked it out to Beane, Sports Illustrated's pick for its Mr. Clutch award.

Tulane beats K-State in first round of NCAA tourney

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

ORLANDO, Fla. — This time, there was no fairy-tale ending.

The Wildcats lost their first NCAA Tournament game appearance since 1990 in the same fashion that they had been winning games all season — in the final seconds.

Sixth-seeded K-State's 55-53 loss to the No. 11 seed Tulane Green Wave in the first round of the Southeast regional extended the Cats' NCAA Tournament losing streak to four games and ended their season with a 19-11 mark.

Tulane improved its record to 22-8 and will face Florida State Saturday afternoon.

"I'm very disappointed that we didn't get it done today," said Wildcat head coach Dana Altman, who was unsuccessful in his tourney debut.

"But this doesn't take away from a great year. It just takes away from this trip."

The Wildcats wasted several opportunities to pad their small lead in the closing minutes Thursday afternoon.

With 1:57 to play and the Cats clinging to a 53-51 lead, Anthony Beane's pass to Vincent Jackson was deflected by Tulane's Pointer Williams. Williams then dove over the scorer's table and fired the ball off of Jackson.

At the 1:15 mark, Beane threw a catchable pass to Askia Jones. But the ball went off of Jones' hands and out of bounds to Tulane.

"As the game wore down, we lost our focus, our concentration," Altman said. "We didn't handle it as well as I had hoped, and we had some very casual turnovers that disappointed me."

But it may very well have been the Cats scoring — or lack thereof — that really hurt the Cats.

K-State pulled ahead of the Green Wave 51-47 on a basket by Jackson at the 6:14 mark of the game. The rest of the way — eight Tulane points and more than six minutes — the Cats would score just one more time, that being a fast-break dunk by Jackson.

And the Wildcats missed three shots in the final 10 seconds that would have put K-State up by a point. The Cats' last shot of the game, a long three-pointer by Beane, was deflected and was never a threat to Tulane.

Beane, who scored 37 points in last weekend's Big Eight tournament, finished the game with just four points. He made two of seven shots and had four turnovers.

"I never feel like I played my best," he said. "And today, I really didn't. But I can't dwell on that. No one's perfect."

"I just didn't think it would happen at a time like this."

The Wildcats seemed to be in control early in the game, jumping out to an 11-2 lead less than five minutes into the contest. But Tulane rattled off a 20-9 run that gave the Wave the lead.

In that first half, K-State's guard trio of Beane, Jackson and Jones — all three of whom were named to the Big Eight's all-tournament team — had a combined total of three points on one-for-six shooting.

"We weren't shooting the ball well enough from the perimeter," Altman said. "It's hard to pull away when those guys aren't hitting."

The offensive struggle in that first period was Collier, a senior playing in his first, and last, NCAA Tournament game. He made all seven of his shots and led all scorers with 14 first-half points.

"My team just got me the ball in the 12-15 foot range," Collier said. "And I just happened to stroke 'em, that's all."

Tulane coach Perry Clark said Collier's first-half success caught him off-guard.

"I looked at my assistant coach and said, 'Hell, that ain't on the scouting report,'" Perry said. "Collier kicked our butts."

Perry's Wave was led by Matt Greene, who finished with 13 points, including the game-winner with 52.7 seconds left. Williams and Anthony Reed each had 12.

K-State shot just 43 percent for the game. And the Wildcats turned the ball over 20 times. Only three of their 12 three-pointers went in — a 25 percent clip.

"These are good guys," Altman said. "They just came up a little bit short today."

"My only regret is that this season is over. I wanted it to go on as long as it could."

SPORTS DIGEST

►BIG EIGHT DOESN'T FARE WELL IN FIRST ROUND

The reputation of Big Eight basketball took another couple of hits as two of the three conference teams that played in the NCAA tournament's first round yesterday hit the showers.

The No. 10 seeded Missouri Tigers followed K-State into oblivion with a 74-61 loss to the No. 7 Temple Owls in West Regional.

No. 6 K-State was upset earlier in the day by No. 11 Tulane.

The No. 2 Kansas Jayhawks were the Big Eight's only victor, disposing of No. 15 Ball State 94-72.

But the worst headache of the day belongs to the Pac 10's No. 2 Arizona Wildcats. They were beaten by tiny No. 15 Santa Clara College 64-61, marking only the second time a No. 2 seed has lost in the first round of the tournament.

►CAT NETTERS TO PLAY PURDUE, NOTRE DAME

The K-State tennis team continues its spring season as it travels to South Bend, Ind., this weekend for matches against Purdue and Notre Dame.

"We need to compete better than we have up to this point," Coach Steve Bietau said.

"We are not anywhere close to where I would like us to be."

The Cats, 2-8 for the season, will play Purdue on March 20 and Notre Dame on March 21.

DEREK NELSON

FRESNO, Calif. — When a team needs a win, it'll take it any way it can get it.

And the K-State Wildcats did just that Thursday as they beat St. John's 10-8 in a game riddled with errors and walks.

The Wildcats, 5-8, used a five-run first inning to pick up their first win in the Pepsi/Johnny Quik Classic. Those five runs came on only one hit.

Redmen starter Ken Lichtenberg walked four and threw two wild pitches in the inning. To make matters worse, the defense committed two errors. All of this was topped off by Kevin McMullin's RBI single.

"We've been disappointed in the way we've been playing. So, we'll take this one any way we can," Coach Mike Clark said.

But the Wildcats couldn't keep the Redmen from crossing the plate. In the third, St. John's manufactured two runs after a walk, a catcher's interference on K-State's Brian Culp, and three wild pitches by Wildcat starter Scott Dreiling.

In the fourth, it was Lichtenberg's turn again as he walked the first three Wildcat hitters before giving up a base-clearing double to Dave Hendrix.

Hendrix, who has seen limited action this season, came up big for the Wildcats as he also knocked out a triple in the game.

"I'm just trying to make the most of my opportunities," Hendrix said.

Brian Culp greeted relief pitcher Mike Maerten with a double off the wall, and Hendrix scored on an error by the first baseman. Culp now has a six-game hitting streak. He leads the tournament in hitting with a .533 average in four games.

"Brian has been hitting the ball very well lately. As a team we're swinging the bats a lot better lately," Clark said.

The Wildcats added an insurance run in the seventh. They would need it because the Redmen would score in the fifth, sixth and seventh innings. The game ended after eight innings because of the tournament time limit.

Dreiling picked up his first win of the season for the Cats to raise his record to 1-1.

Brett Bock came in to replace Pat Ralston in the seventh inning and picked up his second save of the year. This save gave him nine career saves and the K-State record.

The Cats continue play in Fresno through Saturday.

They will return home for games Monday and Tuesday against Minnesota.

Future of Farrell mural discussed

WADE SISSON
Collegian

The fate of the "We Are the Dream!" mural in the Minorities Resource/Research Center of Farrell Library was the topic of a discussion Wednesday afternoon. Under the Farrell expansion proposal, the mural will be part of a library staff lounge on the fourth floor. The new multicultural center will move down to the third floor. "I think the critical point is to have the mural preserved, though some of us may not agree with it being in a staff lounge," Mordean Taylor-Archer, assistant provost of multicultural affairs, said in a meeting at the minorities center. Karen McCulloh, assistant to Farrell Dean Brice Hobrock, said the staff lounge location was selected with the students' interests in mind. "The reason we put the staff lounge here is because it's the most isolated part of what will be the new library," she said. "We worked very hard to make this a safe library." Hobrock said the fate of the mural was discussed in the initial expansion proposal meetings. "There was never any intention to destroy the mural unless it could be replaced or restored to the satisfaction of everyone involved," Hobrock said. "You needn't worry that something is going to happen in the dark of night. I'd be a dead man," he said.

Charles Walters and Ian Bautista, candidates for student body president and vice president, respectively, organized the meeting so students could gain information and give input concerning the mural's future. Representatives of the Hispanic American Leadership Organization, Native American Student Body, Black Student Union and Asian American Students for Inter-cultural Awareness were invited to discuss what will become of the mural, Walters said. "I don't look at it as a black thing or a minority thing, but as a thing to be preserved at Farrell Library," Paul Bridges, sophomore in social work, said. Delilah Hamilton, director of the minorities center, said there are four options in deciding what to do with the mural. The mural could be preserved in its original location or moved to a

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

She's ignoring the warnings, and it may be too late

DEAR CASSANDRA,

A female worker in our building has the nasty habit of walking through the corridors with a lit cigarette. Every time she uses the restroom, she smokes, as well. We are tired of breathing her smoke and feel we shouldn't have to. She is not very approachable, if you know what we mean, and we would like your suggestion on how to handle the situation.

P.S. Please hurry with your response because she will be going on maternity leave soon.

Choking in Fairchild

DEAR CHOKING,

I'm not sure if you are trying to be subtle or have just missed the forest for the trees.

If this woman is about to take off on maternity leave, I'm assuming she is pregnant. If she is pregnant, she shouldn't be smoking.

No matter how much you may dislike this stand-offish smokestack, as a fellow human being, you owe it to her to somehow let her know how much she is endangering her baby's health. There's probably a warning right there on the pack she's carrying around, but perhaps she's not aware of the variety of dangers of smoking while pregnant.

If you don't feel comfortable approaching her, talk to one of her friends or simply leave some information on her desk. I'm sure Lafene would be glad to oblige with a pamphlet or two.

Unfortunately, if she is far enough along to be leaving for maternity leave, it may just be too late.

Oh, and have that friend let her know her smoking in the workplace bothers quite a few of the people around her. It's not rude if she doesn't know it's bothering you. Hopefully, letting her know will be all it takes to alleviate the situation.

If she doesn't listen to reason on either front, and smoking is allowed in Fairchild, I'm afraid there's not much you can do aside from petitioning the University to designate part of the building non-smoking.

You would think endangering her own health and the health of her baby would be enough. Second-hand smoke is nothing to sneeze about.

House approves deficit blueprint

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The House moved to close the book on Reaganomics Thursday by embracing President Clinton's recipe of new spending to create jobs, plus long-term budget cuts and tax increases to whittle the deficit.

On a virtual party-line 243-183 vote, the Democratic-dominated chamber approved a deficit-reduction blueprint that would trim budget shortfalls by $510 billion over the next five years. Only 11 Democrats strayed and opposed the president, while no Republicans supported his plan.

The savings — to be enacted in future bills — would be split. About half would come from spending cuts on defense and benefit programs such as Medicare. The rest would arise from tax increases, mainly on the rich and corporations. It resembled a plan the Senate was also debating.

"The one thing we need to do tonight is to say the Congress of the United States stands behind this young man," said Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo. "We want to give him a chance. We want our people to succeed. We want a new day for this country."

With a near party-line 240-185 test vote of approval, the House then moved toward passage of a companion bill pumping $16.3 billion in new spending into community development grants, small business loans and other job-creating projects. The administration says the measure would create 219,000 jobs this year and more later.

In the Senate, where debate will spill into next week, party discipline also held. Democrats defeated, 53-46, a GOP effort to strip Clinton's proposed energy tax from the plan.

new location. Hamilton said removing the mural may not be feasible. Other options include reproducing the mural either photographically or by incorporating features of the current mural into a new version.

"We Are the Dream!" was created and painted by minority students at K-State, who also helped fund the project.

Begun in the fall of 1978, the mural took two years for student artists Harold Carter, Willie McDonald and Travis Mosley to complete.

"A student came to me and said, 'Let's do something in the minorities center,'" Antonia Pigno, professor of modern languages, said. "I said to get other people interested, and he did."

"This is their legacy. To put it in a library staff lounge would be the most ironic thing in the world."

$89.40 for dues, memberships and subscriptions, $11.90 for professional supplies and $8,584.50 for salaries.

Student Government Services Office allocations were postponed until March 30.

In special orders, the K-State men's volleyball team received a special allocation for a tournament in which they will participate. The tournament will be in Austin, Texas.

The allocation of $448.26 for travel and $270 for lodging will be taken from the Reserves for Contingencies account.

Passing by unanimous vote was an approval of additional Elections Committee members.

These members include Ann Woodbury, Mark Wyss and Kara Rogers.

At press time, Senate was moving into the first readings of a bill for a special allocation to the K-State National Youth Service Day Committee.

NOW president stresses women's involvement in the abortion issue that hasn't been there before now. People are receiving death threats, bombs are being found in abortion clinics, and people's lives are at stake."

This week, Ireland received a pamphlet that was mailed to 33,000 medical students across the country. On the inside flap of the pamphlet was a list of pro-life jokes, including ones directed at the killing of pro-choice individuals.

"These are not peaceful, loving people we are dealing with. These anti-abortion threats are just as much a form of extortion as someone putting a gun to your head," Ireland said.

Though most of Ireland's speech focused on the progress of women in today's society, she also talked about ways to improve the strength of NOW.

"Many young women are steered away from being a feminist for fear that it means they are lesbian-activists. Lesbian and gay issues are very important to NOW because the degradation of these groups is reflective of the demise of women."

Ireland said she wanted to support political activism and reassure young members of the audience that support of NOW does not relate to their sexual orientation.

Ireland questioned the ban on gays in the military.

"Are men in the military afraid that they will be sexually harassed the way women have been harassed for years?" Ireland asked.

The speech culminated with comments about how women in Kansas can change their future by becoming involved in their state government.

Ireland was invited by the Women's Resource Center at ESU to speak at their Women's Week festivities. The speech Thursday night capped a week of seminars on feminine issues.

"We had a list of possible speakers, thinking that Patricia Ireland wouldn't travel to a smaller school to speak. We are thrilled that she accepted the offer and are equally excited about the good turnout," Sally Torey, director of the Women's Resource Center, said.

said she is still very homesick. "I miss home terribly. At the moment I miss everything," she said.

Dimas said English was not a problem when she came here because she studied the language at high school in her country.

"I did English in high school," she said.

Vanwinge said her native language is Dutch, but she also learned English in high school.

She said she doesn't like the cold weather in Manhattan as it hardly ever snows in Belgium.

"We don't have trouble with ice and snow," she said.

Dimas said she would prefer to go home during winter rather than stay in Manhattan.

She said she has developed a way of coping by wearing extra clothing.

"I wear three layers of clothing sometimes," she said.

She said she would encourage friends from her country to attend K-State if they can stand loneliness and cold weather.

Vanwinge said though she is the only student from Belgium at K-

State, she is very comfortable because she has made a few friends.

"I feel very comfortable here. I know a few people, not a lot. I don't feel like a stranger," she said.

Dimas said she plans to return home after completing her studies to work with a U.S.-based company in the area of food technology.

Vanwinge said she will be returning home and hopes to get a job with a social organization.

Dispute leads to fatal shooting

NEIL ANDERSON

Collegian

A 34-year-old Manhattan man was fatally shot early Saturday morning after a dispute at a local restaurant.

Kenneth C. Miller, 2212 Northview St., died at about 4:40 a.m. Saturday at Memorial Hospital from the wounds.

Byron H. Kindle, 23, who is assigned to the Dental Activity at Fort Riley, was arrested at 8:30 a.m. Saturday after calling police from Wakefield to turn himself in.

He is charged with second-degree murder and remains in the Riley County Jail in lieu of $50,000 bond.

Miller was shot several times with a .32 caliber semiautomatic weapon. He was transported to Memorial Hospital where surgery was attempted.

The argument between Miller and Kindle started at McDougal's restaurant in Manhattan. McDougal's employees refused to comment on the shooting.

The shooting reportedly took place about one mile north of K-18 on the southbound shoulder of Scenic Drive, west of Manhattan. The events occurring between McDougal's and the scene of the incident are still unknown.

Riley County Police are continuing investigation of the incident.

Debaters advance to finals of nationals

BRYAN LARSON

K-State's dominating debate squad may soon be thought of as a dynasty.

This accolade would be forthcoming because the squad could be in the final four of the debate national championships for the fourth straight year.

The national championship tournament is taking place at Towson State in Maryland. It began on Friday and will conclude today.

"Right now we have two teams going into the final eight. If things keep going well for us, it is very possible that we will have two teams in the final four of the tournament," said John Burtis, head of the speech department.

"It is everyone's hope that we will end up with the top individual team. It will be exciting to see if that happens."

The tourney began on Friday with 221 teams competing. During the opening round of the tournament, each team debated in eight matches. Five K-State teams competed in the opening round.

Boating trip ends in drowning

KARREY BRITT

Collegian

The search continues for a K-State student who apparently drowned in a boating accident March 20 in the Smoky Hill River south of Abilene.

Colin Greene, 21, sophomore in biology, was reported missing by authorities after the accident occurred at about 2 p.m., two miles south of Abilene near the Kansas Power and Light plant dam, said Curt Bennett, Dickinson County Sheriff.

Greene's 8-foot flatbottom boat, which was propelled with paddles, overturned after he and two other K-State students were preparing to leave the dam area and continue their journey, Bennett said. Their boating trip started upstream near Solomon and was to continue into the Chapman area.

Bennett said the men were on their annual spring break float trip. This was the first year area waters have been dangerously high and turbulent.

"The young men stopped at the dam to transfer their boats and gear to the lower side," Bennett said. "Greene stepped into the boat, then the current pulled the boat into the turbulence near the dam, and it disappeared."

The 38-degree water was 8 feet above normal and turbulent, he said. Greene tried to paddle through the turbulence but was unsuccessful. He went down in 25 to 30 feet of water.

Bennett said a fish-and-game official told him turbulence in a dam area is the worst type of situation.

Greene had been wearing a life jacket but had taken it off while he was transferring gear, Bennett said.

Kelly Kuntz, sophomore in arts and sciences, and Jeffrey Mick, senior in accounting, attempted to throw a line to help Greene, but were unsuccessful. Kuntz and Mick called the authorities. They were not injured.

Later, the young men saw the boat come up several miles east of the dam area at the Kyle Road Bridge, Bennett said. Camping gear also was recovered.

That same day, helicopter crew members from Fort Riley were used to search the banks of the Smoky Hill river to see if Greene might be alive or if they could find his body, but they were unsuccessful, he said.

The Dickinson County sheriff's department, Kansas Wildlife and Parks, Abilene police department, Abilene area emergency medical service personnel, Enterprise firefighters, a canine unit from Concordia and several concerned citizens also helped search in the dam area. Areas near the Kyle Road bridge and Enterprise bridge and high points along the river were also searched.

The high waters have been a tremendous problem for the search, Bennett said.

To reduce turbulent water flow, the Army Corps of Engineers in Kansas City, Mo., decreased the water flow from 3,000 cubic feet per minute to 200 feet per minute in Kanopolis, Glen Elder and Wilson reservoirs.

"The water is still at least four feet above normal," he said. "There is way too much water for dragging equipment. Yesterday's rain hasn't helped the situation."

While waiting for the water flow to decrease, local firemen and fishermen, deputies and concerned citizens have been checking the shoreline periodically, covering an area of four miles.

A boat and a Kansas Air National Guard helicopter from Salina also are being used to check the shoreline.

"We will continue an intense search for the next week or two if the water level goes down," Bennett said. "We should see a noticeable difference in the next day or two."

Greene

"We will continue an intense search for the next week or two."

K-State hoping to benefit from Clinton's plan

NORA DONAGHY

Collegian

President Clinton's plan for the restructuring of student financial aid has some at K-State on the edges of their seats.

Until the plan's specifics are determined and approved by Congress, the K-State/Manhattan community can only guess at the plan's local effect.

"We're very excited about it," Carol Peak, director of the K-State Community Service Program, said. "If (community service) programs can be developed, I think it could mean so much to our country."

Clinton's plan involves a proposal that would allow students to pay off college loans in exchange for community service or a percentage of their income after they graduate. He also has proposed that students would borrow directly from the federal government.

The president recently unveiled his Summer of Service proposal, a pilot program that would demonstrate the kind of national service program he envisions.

K-State's Community Service Program has received a request for a service proposal from the Commission on National and Community Service. The application is due April 1, and participants in the program will be notified by April 15. Between four and 10 sites will be selected across the nation.

Peak said the CSP is preparing its proposal.

"We believe we can structure a response that meets the needs of the commission," she said. "We will immediately be ready to offer opportunities on campus (if K-State is selected)."

Ethan Zindler, spokesperson for the White House Office of National Service, said further details of the Summer of Service and the student loan restructuring plan are not yet available.

"We're working carefully and methodically on how the best way to work the program will be," Zindler said.

Zindler said K-State has as good a chance of being accepted into the Summer of Service program as any other school.

"As far as I know, K-State will have as good access as other schools," he said. "I would not be surprised if at least one of the sites is a rural site."

Zindler said the White House is interested in finding out what college students think of the Community service in full swing at K-State

NORA DONAGHY

Collegian

A lot of education doesn't happen in the classroom.

That's the belief of members of K-State's Community Service Program, which makes it easy for students to give back to the community.

"There are a lot of opportunities to fit any student's schedule," said Tandy Trost, senior in community health and nutrition and student coordinator for the CSP Volunteer Clearinghouse.

The student-run program was founded in 1987 with the intent of enabling K-State students to participate in community-service activities.

Program members direct students to the areas in which they are interested in serving and coordinate activities on and off campus dealing with service.

"It's really broad-based," Trost said. "The commitment could last a year or just a day."

The program offers a variety of service opportunities for students. YES (Youth Education Service) Tutoring provides K-State tutors to primary- and secondary-school students.

CSP Mentors, which is similar to the Big Brothers/Big Sisters program, matches K-State students with at-risk Manhattan Middle School students to encourage mutual learning, teaching, guidance and communication.

SAVE (Structural Assistance Volunteer Effort) offers students the chance to aid a rural Kansas community for a day. Student volunteers assist communities with clean-up, fix-up activities, and the community designs projects and provides materials and community volunteers.

WOMAN KILLED IN CAR ACCIDENT

MANHATTAN (AP) — A 74-year-old woman was killed in a two-car collision this weekend, Riley County Police said.

Ruby Threewit, of Westmoreland, died at St. Mary's Hospital following the collision about 7:15 p.m. Friday at the intersection of U.S. 24 and a Riley County road. Threewit's car collided with a car driven by Tawnya Klataska, 18, of Greenleaf, Sgt. Adam Angst said. Klataska and a passenger suffered minor injuries.

WOODRUFF SURRENDERS STATE LAW-OFFICER CERTIFICATION

SHAWN BRUCE

Collegian

Former K-State Police officer Harry Woodruff has voluntarily surrendered his state law-officer certification to the Kansas Law Enforcement Training Commission.

The surrender is due to his conviction on a class-D felony after pleading guilty to attempted indecent liberties with a child.

State law, under the Kansas Law Enforcement Training Act, does not allow a person to be qualified as a law enforcement officer if he or she has been convicted of a felony.

Woodruff was sentenced to probation for a period of four years under the intensive supervision and control of Riley County Community Corrections.

Farrell archives tell history of K-State

LORI SCHREIBER

The minutes from the 1886 K-State faculty meeting and the original description of the discovery of Halley's comet can be found on the fifth floor of Farrell Library. Anthony Crawford, University archivist, said the University archives and special collections department can provide students with information on everything from the history of K-State buildings to consumerism. Some of the resources in the archives include indexed clippings of all Collegian articles that relate to K-State, vertical files on everything from professors at K-State to Aggieville, every yearbook published, more than 50,000 photographs of people and places dating back to the 1800s, University records, books published by faculty, student directories since 1908-09 and K-State budgets since 1950. Crawford said the department does not preserve everything, but preserves what it thinks will be needed again in the future. "This preserves the history of K-State and provides a documentation of the past," Crawford said. "People can do research here, and they can also go back and see why things are done the way they are done today." John Vander Velde, special collections librarian, said the special collections department now has more than 40,000 volumes. Books that are rare, about Kansas, limited editions and unusual or

Your Q. & A. About Student Financial Assistance

Q: Where is the Financial Aid Office located?

A: The office of Student Financial Assistance is located in Fairchild 104 and is handicap accessible by using the east ground floor entrance and elevators.

Q: How do I apply for Financial Aid at K-State?

A: You may pick up the free application for Federal Student Aid at Fairchild 104 between 9:00 a.m. and 4:45 p.m. (Yes, the office is open through the noon hour.) If you can't make it to our office during business hours, you may pick up a financial application outside our door at any time.

Q: Whom can I talk to if I have questions about the Financial Aid process?

A: The Financial Aid office is giving you the perfect opportunity to visit with someone—in person—during their open house April 5th through April 9th. Our entire office is looking forward to visiting with the students at K-State. We invite students to drop by and get acquainted.

Q: What happens during "Open House"?

A: The professional staff—including directors—will be available to answer your questions. Feel free to ask about the forms, application process, or any of the Federal Aid programs.

Q: Where do I leave my financial aid paperwork? Do you have a drop box?

A: Our office has two drop boxes. One is located outdoors by the parking meters in front of Fairchild Hall. The second drop box is located indoors near our office entrance at Fairchild 104 and is handicap accessible. Of course, you may always mail your paperwork or leave it with one of our reception area staff.

The chart shows how your IRA earnings will grow at a faster rate than other kinds of investments, because of the tax deferral allowed under IRS regulations. You'll keep more of your money for retirement — and depending on your income and filing status, you also may be eligible for an IRA tax deduction.

Come in and let me show you how a Commerce IRA can help you meet your financial goals, even if you have a retirement plan at work. I'll help you choose a Fixed or Variable Rate Certificate of Deposit — or other attractive Commerce IRA investment. But don't put it off — April 15 is the deadline for contributing to your 1992 IRA.

For a smart, safe investment in your future, count on an IRA from Commerce Bank."

Note: This chart assumes a married couple (in the 28% tax bracket) invests in a regular certificate of deposit that earned 5% capitalization annually. This example assumes that the IRA owner is not eligible for tax deductible contributions, but is eligible for tax-deferral of annual earnings, according to the Tax Reform Act of 1986. RODEO WRANGLERS

STORY BY KARREY BRITT • PHOTOS BY CARY CONOVER

The spring weather brought in rodeo fans from around the area to attend the 37th annual K-State Rodeo during the weekend.

With 141 entries and more than 20 schools participating, it proved to be a busy but rewarding experience for K-State rodeo team members, especially Jessica Sommers, senior in pre-veterinary medicine.

Sommers placed third overall in the goat-tying competition out of 26 entries. "Jessica did real well representing K-State," Coach Steve Frazier said. "She placed fourth in the first round and tied for fourth in the short round. She ended up with a third average."

Sommers had a misfortune in the break-away competition because she broke the barrier, Frazier said. Otherwise, she had a good chance of making it in the finals.

Twenty-eight K-State students participated in the rodeo.

"This is a young team, and they are improving with each rodeo," Frazier said. "K-State made a good showing."

This rodeo was the first collegiate rodeo for bull rider Todd Laird, junior in animal science.

"I have a lot of learning to do," Laird said. "I have a lot of work ahead of me, but I learned quite a bit this weekend by watching the other participants and listening to them. The competition was really stiff."

Jeremy Ostrander, junior in agricultural engineering, said he agreed.

"I feel we did better in Fort Scott two weeks ago," Ostrander said. "It was pretty disappointing doing well there and then not so well here in front of those who back us up."

Amy Fecht, sophomore in animal science, competed in the barrel racing competition.

"I came in to make a clean run, then hit a barrel. This knocked my time down," she said. "The run could have been cleaner and smoother, but I did the best I could."

"As a whole, the rodeo team put on a good rodeo," she said. "I heard other schools say they were happy with the way things ran."

Rodeo club president Carrie Sharp, senior in animal science, said she was impressed with the members all three days.

"I had some good compliments from some highly ranked individuals saying they were impressed with the rodeo," she said. "The team made a good impression for the University."

Before the rodeo competition Sunday, Kristi DeOme, sophomore in agricultural journalism, was crowned Miss Rodeo K-State.

Janet Bailey, junior in agricultural journalism, was first runner-up. Becky Hopkins, junior in animal science industry, and Brenda Brooksby, senior in accounting, were also Miss K-State Rodeo contestants.

Hopkins was recognized for horsemanship, and DeOme was recognized for congeniality.

Hopkins and Brooksby were recognized for the written test, which the contestants took on Thursday. The test was to see how knowledgeable the contestants were on collegiate rodeo.

"The competition is not necessarily a pageant, but rather a way we can represent college rodeo," Bailey said.

Participants in the 37th annual K-State Intercollegiate Rodeo work with the horses and riders in the chutes before the bareback riding event. About 20 colleges, including K-State, participated in the competition.

During the Miss Rodeo K-State Coronation, Janet Bailey, junior in animal science and industry, and Jessica Sommers, senior in animal science and industry and 1992 K-State Rodeo Queen, pose for a photographer after Bailey won as first runner up. Kristi DeOme, junior in agricultural journalism, won the rodeo queen title but was in the hospital at the time.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

UNFORTUNATELY, THIS IS WHERE PEOPLE ARE PUTTING TOO MANY RETIREMENT DOLLARS.

Every year, a lot of people make a huge mistake on their taxes. They don't take advantage of tax deferral and wind up sending Uncle Sam money they could be saving for retirement.

Fortunately, that's a mistake you can easily avoid with TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs not only ease your current tax-bite, they offer a remarkably easy way to build retirement income—especially for the "extras" that your regular pension and Social Security benefits may not cover. Because your contributions are made in before-tax dollars, you pay less taxes now. And since all earnings on your SRA are tax-deferred as well, the money you don't send to Washington works even harder for you. Down the road, that can make a dramatic difference in your quality of life.

What else makes SRAs so special? A range of allocation choices—from the guaranteed security of TIAA to the diversified investment accounts of CREF's variable annuity—all backed by the nation's number one retirement system.

Why write off the chance for a more rewarding retirement? Call today and learn more about how TIAA-CREF SRAs can help you enjoy many happy returns.

Benefit now from tax deferral. Call our SRA hotline 1 800-842-2733, ext. 8016.

75 years of ensuring the future for those who shape it.

By the Collegian Editorial Board

We have met the enemy. ...

THE ISSUE

The Pentagon has revealed widespread testing of chemicals on American servicemen during the last 60 years.

When one hears of human guinea pigs, the cold heartlessness of many human-rights-ignorant countries comes to mind. But this is not necessarily the case anymore.

The Pentagon recently announced its plans to declassify information and lift a silence order from military personnel involving the secret testing of chemical weapons on American soldiers.

More than 60,000 veterans have been noted as exposed to large doses of mustard gas during the test program, dating back to World War II. Information will be released on other tests done through 1968.

The Institute of Medicine, a part of the National Academy of Science, said it found many of the soldiers had been forced into the tests and sworn into secrecy under the threat of imprisonment.

Tests, such as those directly exposing soldiers to high radiation levels after atomic blasts, were found in old, high-security files.

Both these programs claimed they were testing to improve protective clothing and masks to guard against the materials used against the soldiers.

Maybe our government had more in common with China after all, such as a certain lack of respect for human life.

DEBATE SANS SOUL

JOHN
HAWKS

I really dislike debaters.

It's not just that the silly pencil-flicking things they do that annoy me, though they do. I just think that what they do is slimy, and the way they talk about it is disgraceful. (I'm going to stereotype mercilessly today. So, if you're a debater, and you don't recognize yourself here, then I apologize.)

This isn't just going to be a hate column. I intend to develop an argument, one that I believe in. That's the difference between me and them. They just develop arguments; they don't have to believe in them. And usually they don't.

I know I'll catch a lot of flak for this because K-State has such a winning debate tradition. Proponents of debate's legitimacy will stress that debate competitions in high school and college help participants develop rhetorical skill and an ability to see both sides of issues.

The case they will make just doesn't wash with me. I might accept it if I didn't know better, but I've heard debaters talking about what they really do. And what they do, in solid form, would smell just plain bad.

The idea of debate is that two teams randomly are assigned two opposing sides of an issue. Each of the teams then uses evidence, rhetorical skill and technique to defeat its opponent. The teams are not judged on their beliefs, but on how well they argue their sides.

Some would say this encourages people to view problems objectively. While it may have this effect, more often it encourages debaters to be duplicitous, forced by the flip of a coin to defend positions they would normally consider untenable.

Consider the legendary squirrel case. A few years ago, the topic for Kansas high school debate was caring for the elderly. One debate team found itself defending the position that the state should provide pets, particularly squirrels, to ease the adjustment into a care situation. Dopey.

Objectivity and problem-solving are not encouraged by debate. The best solution rarely wins the argument, and is usually defeated with smoke and mirrors. The squirrel thing may have a little promise in a few cases, but it is no solution for the problems of the elderly. But the squirrel proposal won the debate.

The scary thing is, too often exactly this situation occurs in the decision-making centers of our government. Legislators debating issues rarely see that much of what they do is merely a ruse, smoke and mirrors, to defeat the arguments of their opponents.

Far too often, they refuse to come together to find the best solution for the problems they face. They prefer to debate their political opponents, competing for the opinions of the people and re-election instead of a tournament trophy.

Ordinary people like me don't like it, and we usually don't understand it. We feel the same about debaters. Good debaters don't like it when their tournaments are judged by real (i. e. non-debate-type) people. Real people tend to give the victory to the side with the best solution, rather than to the side with the best rhetoric.

Debaters just don't get it. Plato disliked rhetoric 2,500 years ago (he compared it to cooking), and I dislike it today (though I like cooking). The goal of a speaker or policy-maker should be to inform real people and to present to them the best solution, after weighing all the available facts.

Some problems will have no solution, or many solutions. In these cases, policy-makers should work together to achieve a compromise or a consensus, not divisively debate each other with barrages of empty words.

These are the values and the techniques that we should be teaching our children, and from my point of view, competition in debate just doesn't cut it. Future decision makers must depend on rationality, not rhetoric, to make a better world.

But I'll be a happy man if I never see anyone do that pencil thing again.

Sink or sink: A dilemma

I'm a tenured, published, research-oriented associate professor in the A. Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications who generally gets somewhat above-average teaching scores. I've never published a series like this in the Collegian before, and I'm likely to catch a lot of flak for doing so now.

You will find that this is not an anti-research, anti-publication essay. I enjoy research. I get research grants. I try to interest my students in research, and I publish research that I hope will make a difference. Without research, teaching becomes flabby, then inaccurate and eventually downright wrong. And without publication, teachers would not have access to the newest findings in their field.

DAVID

But after 20 years of teaching, research and service at K-State, I feel compelled to alert students about how things seem to be today in the College of Arts and Sciences in regard to the increasing disillusionment of the teaching faculty. Most of all, I'd like to encourage the campus to debate the problem of evaluating and honoring good teaching.

Every student taking courses offered by departments in the college should understand that these days, each time a professor shows up to teach a class, the student is witnessing an act of selflessness on the part of that professor. And any time a student receives advising help or consultation about a paper or assistance in starting a career, the professor providing that service is acting out of charity.

For under current policy, what professors should be doing to advance in their jobs (or even to retain them if the professor isn't tenured) is research and publication — period. The college's leadership has lately made it clear that nothing else will count so heavily in a faculty member's tenure or promotion as the number of refereed publications and juried presentations that can be produced.

Previous administrations have at least given lip service to the value of teaching and service, but this one seems determined to "advance" K-State into the upper ranks of research institutions. That in itself is a laudable goal. But what will become of the University's reputation for offering a strong undergraduate education now that there are nothing but disincentives for the college's faculty to perform well in the classroom?

How long will K-State President Jon Wefald be able to quote the assessment of K-State as the "student scholar capital of America among public universities"? Not long, when the quality of instruction is all but ignored in the drive to count publication credits instead. Good teachers who publish only moderate amounts of research will be denied promotion and tenure, and they will leave.

It has been disheartening to observe department after department acquiescing to the short-sighted "publish or perish" model that the college's current leadership has borrowed from "big time" universities. But please be clear on this — our academic leaders are not venal. They are acting in good faith, trying to encourage K-State professors to achieve recognition through publication at the same level and in the same way as professors at more renowned schools. Yet, in some of those better-known institutions, such policies have forced out a whole generation of promising instructors and assistant professors, and undergraduate education has suffered. The same thing is beginning to happen here.

Some of us who have played the game and prospered at it will, if urged, admit that a system that rewards professors primarily on the basis of publication is bankrupt. We sometimes find our own journals unreadable, too often rife with research that appears to have been published for its procedural elegance and the complexity of its quantitative proof, rather than because it increases true knowledge in the field or in some way benefits the larger society. But publication credit is the coin of the realm, because getting published is hard to do. It is prestigious to beat the high odds that your manuscript will be rejected, because it means that your professional peers approve of your work.

In contrast, teaching is presumed to be easy. If it were hard, like journal publication, only a few of the very best professors would ever be allowed to teach, and the rest would be jealously polishing their skills and waiting for their chance at the chalkboard. But it isn't that way, because there are always more classes that ought to be offered than there are warm bodies to teach them.

When many apply, the few who are chosen gain prestige. That's the University publish-or-perish model.

When virtually all are chosen, there is no prestige. That's the University teaching model.

But while no one has suggested that every professional athlete should be expected to excel in two sports like Bo Jackson has done, academia clings to the notion that a strong researcher and a strong teacher should reside in the same body. That's ridiculous. Doing well at either research or teaching demands a concentration of time and thought that almost precludes excellence at the other. And the expectation that everyone should star at both teaching and research ends up wasting talent. There are teachers who are so good we should beg them to teach additional courses in lieu of a research requirement. And there are splendid researchers whose work is so important we ought to bar them from getting near a classroom.

This is the dilemma of every big-time academic institution. As K-State strives to move into the top echelon of research schools, we must find a way to stop the erosion of respect for the teaching profession that almost always results from too heavy an emphasis on research and publication.

► FLAGS

Sadly, patriotism isn't worth the high cost

Editor,

Well, they have done it again. This time it's flag number five.

During the past two years, we have had four American flags stolen right off our flagpole. After the first few thefts, we unsuccessfully tried new ways of locking the string on the pole, and finally we took the string completely off the pole. But none of these methods worked, and a fourth flag, which had been flown over the U.S. Capitol, was ripped off.

After that special fourth flag was stolen, we did buy a new flag, but we had never flown it, out of fear it will be abducted like all of its predecessors.

But the day of the K-State vs. KU basketball game, I decided to risk it, and I put out our new, expensive purple KSU flag. New because my parents bought it for me when I told them I was going to K-State and expensive because they bought it at the K-State Union. Oh boy, was this a big mistake.

They indeed struck again, and instead of just simply taking the flag this time, they also stole the top two-thirds of the flagpole.

It is an outrage that we should be forced to have to buy a new flag and now a new flagpole after each of the five robberies. And this time, it will cost over $100 for a new flagpole and $35 for a new KSU flag.

Therefore, I would like to ask those individuals involved to think about what you have done and return the upper part of our flagpole and my new KSU flag.

I guess what I am trying to say is it is becoming very expensive to be patriotic and supportive of K-State in Manhattan.

Parking is a problem that must be solved

Editor,

As a proud K-State student, I cannot criticize the University without mentioning something positive first. I have had nothing but good experiences here. I have made wonderful friends and found excellent leadership opportunities.

Recently, however, I went to the Rec Complex with some friends and was disappointed with the parking system. After waiting 15 minutes for a metered space, I decided to park in the dirt parking lot located by the stadium lots and Bramlage Coliseum. I presumed I would not receive a parking ticket clear out there. I was wrong. I was the recipient of a $10 parking ticket.

Raydon Robel, director of Recreational Services, said more than 3,000 students utilize the Rec Complex each day. Yet, there are only 12 metered parking spaces. A Parking Services employee informed me that it is illegal to park at the rec from 7 a.m. to 4 p.m. without a $25 per semester University parking permit, or a temporary permit that can be purchased for $4 a week or $1 a day.

The Parking Services employees do not realize that some students don't have classes Monday through Friday from 7 a.m. to 4 p.m. Also, many students have meetings and homework to do in the evenings.

If there are no metered parking spaces available, am I expected to go purchase a temporary permit? Or should I spend an additional $50 each year for a University permit that I will only use to park at the rec? Robel said that each student pays a line-item fee of $32.25 per semester for the rec facilities. Yet, if I do not want to fight 3,000 students for 12 metered spaces, I am expected to pay $114.50 per year for the rec fee and a parking permit.

I understand the Rec Complex has no ties with the parking situation. Robel said there used to be a Rec Complex parking permit, but it was discontinued two years ago in spite of his efforts to keep it. The fee for this permit was half of a University permit. Leslie Jones, Parking Services employee, said the rec permit was done away with because it was "just getting too complicated."

Put the students first. Do we not pay enough for the services already? Put a meter in every parking space. Or please bring back the rec parking permit for the off-campus students, who comprise more than 60 percent of the student body. Next time, I will just leave the quarter I would put in the non-existent meter on my windshield for the person issuing parking tickets.

Energetic children entertain elderly

MICHELLE HAUPT
Collegian

Miniature entertainers, ages 3 to 5, energetically sing, dance and perform skits once a month at Wharton Manor Inc., a local intermediate care facility.

Giggling and chattering, children clad in snowsuits with mittens attached to the sleeves make the journey from the KSU Developmental Center, rain or shine.

After the winter garb is removed and placed in a haphazard pile, the children run to form a line at the front of the room. Some slide into place like professional baseball players, while others quietly take their place in line.

The chaos subsides momentarily as Melody Harcrow, lead teacher of the Preschool II class, introduces her students, whom she refers to as her friends.

With a microphone in hand, Harcrow moves from child to child so they can introduce themselves. Some are shy, shrug their shoulders and turn away from the crowd. Others grab the mike with both hands, put it almost in their mouths and scream their introductions.

Wharton Manor residents look forward to the monthly visits from Harcrow's class. Porter Brock, Wharton Manor resident, said he loved it when they came out.

"I love young people," Brock said. "They are at a cute age right now."

Brock said these children learn through expressing themselves.

"Many years ago, children should be seen and not heard," Brock said. "That's an old-fashioned idea. I don't believe that at all."

Following the songs and dances, the children say goodbye to their friends. Some bravely give away hugs, while others smile and wave.

After attending a seminar in 1989 that addressed experiences between generations, Harcrow questioned her students about their perceptions. Some children said old people were mean, and the age of old people was 30 years.

"One child said old people were sad because their mommies and daddies had died," Harcrow said.

After questioning her students, Harcrow said she felt visits to Wharton Manor were something she needed to do.

"The children's perception of old people has changed," she said.

Harcrow said this is fun, but it was a good learning experience for the children as well.

"They get a lot out of it as well as giving a lot," Harcrow said.

Four hands are better than two for pianists

ALICIA HALE
Collegian

Two faculty pianists will present a concert of four-hand repertoire Tuesday.

Virginia Houser, assistant professor of music and director of preparatory programs, and William Wingfield, staff accompanist, will perform at 8 p.m. in All Faiths Chapel.

"This program is a reflection of a trend of music from the 19th century," Houser said. "Four-hand music became an attraction to composers during this time. They would take the hot tunes of the day and make them four-hand so they could be played in social settings. This was a very popular way to listen to the music of the day."

This will be the first time the two pianists have presented a concert together. They will perform with both pianos, as well as using only one.

"This concert is something we've talked about since we've been on faculty together, but we had just never taken the steps until now," Houser said.

Wingfield said he is looking forward to the opportunity to do a different type of playing.

"Although I enjoy everything I do here, this will be exciting for me because it is a different type of performance. Obviously, as an accompanist, I don't usually get to perform with another pianist," Wingfield said.

Three of the pieces on the program originally were written for piano and later transcribed for orchestra, Houser said.

The first, "Jeux d'Enfants" by Georges Bizet, will be appreciated by people involved in music, Houser said.

"The music is written to

Michigan, N. Carolina round out Final Four

Wolverines squeak past Temple, 77-72

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SEATTLE — Michigan is going back to the Final Four after a show of brute power and raw talent overcame a big deficit against Temple.

The Wolverines, aided by a key technical foul against Temple coach John Chaney, danced on the court and donned Final Four shirts at the end of their 77-72 victory Sunday, looking ahead to a meeting with Kentucky in New Orleans.

For the third straight game, Michigan played one dismal half and one superb half. But the Wolverines put together their best play in the second half against the Owls, overcoming a 10-point deficit.

Jalen Rose led Michigan with 17 points, 13 in the second half, as he took control of the offense along with off-guard Jimmy King, who had 14 points. Chris Webber, who survived a beating under the boards, had 13 points and 12 rebounds.

Rick Brunson led Temple (20-13) with 21 points, and Eddie Jones scored 18. Brunson had 33 points and was the Owls' leading scorer on Jan. 30 in Temple's 86-63 loss to K-State in Manhattan.

Michigan (30-4) was aided in the final minutes by a technical foul against Chaney. The Owls trailed only 67-62 with 1:49 left when he argued a call.

That allowed Michigan to pull away with five free throws — one on the technical, two on the call and two more on another play on Michigan's regaining of possession.

From the first bump of the game — Webber landing hard on his butt on the opening tap — Temple took charge, controlling the tempo to grab a 35-27 halftime lead.

Webber spent almost as much time sprawled on the floor as he did running in the opening half. Once he slammed the side of his head on the paint after a layup, and moments later he tumbled onto his back when his arm was yanked by Temple guard Vic Carstarphen.

And the coaches got into the act verbally. Michigan coach Steve Fisher complained to officials that Carstarphen should have been hit with a "flagrant foul," which would have given Webber two free throws and Michigan possession. But while Fisher argued in vain, Chaney shouted at him, "Shut the (blank) up!"

Cincinnati takes Tar Heels into overtime

ASSOCIATED PRESS

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — A dunk didn't do the trick in regulation, so North Carolina went to the three-pointers in overtime and advanced to the Final Four for the ninth time under coach Dean Smith.

The top-seeded Tar Heels (32-4) had a chance to beat second-seeded Cincinnati (27-5) at the regulation buzzer Sunday, but Brian Reese missed a dunk after taking an inbound pass with eight-tenths of a second to play.

Donald Williams took care of things from beyond the three-point arc in overtime, making consecutive treys as North Carolina beat the Bearcats 75-68 and kept them from returning to the Final Four.

North Carolina will meet Kansas, winners over Indiana in the Midwest final, in the national semifinals next Saturday in New Orleans. When the two teams met in the 1991 semifinals, Roy Williams, Smith's long-time assistant, beat the Tar Heels when Smith was ejected late in the game.

The Tar Heels were in trouble in the first half when Cincinnati guard Nick Van Exel snapped out of a tournament-long shooting slump with 21 points, all but three made on three-point field goals. The Bearcats led by as many as 15 points in the opening 20 minutes.

Williams, North Carolina's only legitimate perimeter threat, finished with 20 points.

Smith, the winningest coach in NCAA tournament history with a 53-23 record, has won just one national championship — 1982 in New Orleans, when freshman Michael Jordan hit his famous jumper.

The Tar Heels had a chance to win in regulation, but Reese missed a dunk as the buzzer sounded. Television replays showed that it would have been too late, but referee Jody Silvester said the basket would have counted if it had gone in.

Cincinnati tied the game at 66 with 36 seconds to play when Tarrance Gibson went the length of the court with a loose ball after North Carolina was charged with a 45-second shot clock violation.

George Lynch missed a turnaround jumper with two seconds left, and the ball went out of bounds to North Carolina, setting up the play that Reese failed to finish.

Cincinnati took a quick lead in overtime, but Lynch tied it. The Bearcats missed their last eight shots from the field.

Van Exel, who entered the game shooting 10 for 41 from the field, finished 8 for 24 after going 7 for 14 in the first half. He finished with just two second-half points.

Trip to Disney World can't ease pain of loss

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

Nothing — neither an unexpected visit to Disney World in Orlando, Fla., nor a Big Eight team representing the conference in the Final Four — can alleviate the pain of K-State's first-round loss in the NCAA Tournament, Wildcat forward Ron Lucas said.

"We didn't go down there to go to Disney World," he said. "It might have taken our minds off the loss a little bit, but we would have rather been practicing."

The Wildcats spent Friday afternoon at the Walt Disney attraction — a day that they would have spent preparing for Florida State had they beaten Tulane.

And Lucas, who didn't score in the season finale, said that Kansas' upcoming trip to the Superdome in New Orleans in the Final Four may have made matters worse.

"It really bothers me now that Kansas has made it because I know that we can beat them," he said.

The Wildcats beat KU 74-67 in the second round of the Big Eight tournament just days before K-State's 55-53 loss to Tulane.

"It gets to me," Lucas said. "And if gets to me, I know it gets to the other guys, too. We would much rather have been practicing than spending the day at Disney World."

"When we got there, it kind of got our minds off of it," he said. "But you could see it in everybody's eyes."

Two of the teams in the Elite Eight had been beaten by K-State at some point in the season. In addition to Kansas, the Wildcats pummeled Temple 86-63 in Manhattan.

"If we would have taken care of the ball a little bit better, we could still be playing," Lucas said. "It wouldn't have even been a close game."

Vincent Jackson, who scored 11 points in his final collegiate game, said the trip to the Magic Kingdom was a pleasant surprise.

"I really didn't know that we were going anywhere," he said. "I thought we were going to spend the day in the hotel room and watch basketball."

"Getting to go to Disney World gave us a chance to get things off of our minds. A lot of us have never been there before, and it was something new."

"But I was still thinking about that loss."

Jackson said the Jayhawks being in the Final Four makes it that much more enjoyable to watch.

"I just try to sit back and enjoy it now," he said. "Kansas is there representing the Big Eight. So, I'm just going to enjoy it."

"We had a chance to be there, but we didn't make it."

After the Wildcat baseball team dropped an 11-2 decision to Minnesota Tuesday in Manhattan, K-State head coach Mike Clark said that was as low as his team could get.

Sunday afternoon, the Cats may have gotten a little lower.

Missouri's Rodney Weary hit into a bases loaded fielder's choice in the bottom of the ninth, scoring David Sanderson and defeating K-State 6-5.

The Wildcats, who dropped five of their seven games during the break, fell to 8-14 overall and 1-2 in Big Eight play.

K-State and Missouri exchanged runs in the fourth and fifth innings after the Tigers posted a 1-0 lead in the first. But the Cats tied things up in the sixth when Dave Hendrix hit a two-out double that scored Scott McFall.

But two K-State pitchers gift-wrapped a pair of runs in the seventh for Missouri, giving the Tigers a lead they wouldn't relinquish.

David Leonhart walked Scott Swift with the bases loaded. Clark then brought Pat Ralston in from the bullpen.

But Ralston hit Grant Ingram with his first pitch, scoring another run. Ralston then walked the leadoff hitter in the eighth, who eventually came around to score.

But the Cats clawed back.

With two outs in the top of the ninth and K-State behind 5-2, Missouri second baseman Chris Shockley committed a throwing error that allowed Tim Decker to reach first. Brian Culp then singled, putting runners on the corners.

Chris Wolf then connected with his second homerun of the season to knot the score at 5-5.

But Weary's game-winning RBI improved Missouri's record to 14-6 overall and 2-3 in the conference.

TRACK AND FIELD

Wildcats fare well in season openers

STEVEN ROCK

The Wildcat men's and women's track teams opened the outdoor season with a pair of runner-up team finishes and five provisional qualifiers for the NCAA meet.

"Overall, it was a good meet for us," K-State interim coach Cliff Rovelto said. "It's awfully early in the outdoor season, but I thought we really had some good individual performances."

Both the men and the women finished second in the three-team meets, both behind Arizona and ahead of Air Force.

And although the Wildcats were outscored by an average of 44 points, Rovelto said he thought Arizona — the host team — had a distinct advantage.

"We can't possibly travel enough people to have two people at every event," he said. "We just can't afford that. We left a lot of kids at home that would have won events and scored very highly."

Nonetheless, K-State scored highly in many events.

On the men's side, both Percell Gaskins and Francis O'Neill brought home gold medals. Gaskins, the current national champion in the indoor high jump, won the long jump competition with a leap of 23 feet, 4 3/4 inches.

O'Neill won the 3,000-meter steeplechase with a time of 8:51.2.

"He's just tremendously talented," Rovelto said. "If he stays healthy, he can be as good as he wants to be. He's just got a world of ability."

Andre Gillette's discus throw of 188' 11" was good for third place and a provisional qualifying mark.

On the women's squad, Julie Jackson won the javelin with a throw of 155 feet, 5 inches, good enough to qualify her for the NCAA's. Shanele Stires, a forward on the Lady Cat basketball team, took first-place honors in the shot put.

And Rahma Mateen won the long jump with a leap of 18' 10

1/2." But the long jump was just one facet of Mateen's afternoon — she competed in five different events.

"It was pretty much a long afternoon," Mateen said. "But I'm trying to get in shape right now. And Coach is getting me back in shape now — I'm getting harder workouts."

Included in her long afternoon was her first attempt at the triple jump. She took second place.

"And she's just a freshman getting started," Rovelto said. "She's going to be very, very good eventually."

Gwen Wentland also recorded a provisional qualifying mark, high jumping 5' 11" to earn a second-place finish.

Rovelto said, the season being so young, he's more concerned about individual performances than the teams' second-place finishes.

"We just want to see people have good performances," he said. "There was hardly anything I was disappointed in."

SPORTS DIGEST

►ASTROS BEAT KC, 8-4

KISSIMEE, Fla. — Karl Rhodes hit a three-run homer in a four-run seventh inning, leading the Houston Astros to an 8-4 victory Sunday over Kansas City.

Kansas City went ahead with two runs in the fourth. Hubie Brooks singled with one out and scored on Mike MacFarlane's double. Greg Gagne then doubled.

The Royals added a run in the fifth. Craig Wilson singled, Chris Gwynn doubled, and Brooks lined an RBI single.

Kevin Koslofski's single scored MacFarlane with the Royals' final run.

►GOLFERS HIT THE ROAD

The Wildcat golf teams will compete in the Southwest Missouri State Invitational at Springfield, Mo., today. The two-day event will include two rounds for the women and three for the men.

The K-State women will be one of 12 teams competing, and the men will compete in a 13-team field. The men will be competing in just their second round of golf this season as last week's Baylor/Dr. Pepper Invitational was limited to one round because of rain. The women have played in two tournaments.

Public rallies behind Yeltsin

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Boris Yeltsin told tens of thousands of roaring supporters at the Kremlin gates Sunday that he would not let the Congress decide Russia's destiny.

"Moscow has awakened at last," the president told an estimated 50,000 protesters whose shouts of "Yeltsin! Yeltsin!" and "Down with the Congress!" echoed off the thick Kremlin walls.

Farmers, workers, intellectuals, priests and politicians were among the demonstrators who marched onto Red Square behind five tractors decorated with pictures of Yeltsin.

What began as an enthusiastic pro-Yeltsin rally erupted into a mutual display of emotion when he suddenly appeared on a platform at the base of St. Basil's Cathedral while legislators voted on a motion to remove him.

The crowd chanted his name and waved hundreds of white, blue and red Russian flags.

"It's been a long time since I could feel the breath of 70,000-80,000 people," Yeltsin said, giving his own crowd estimate.

Raising a clenched right fist and smiling, Yeltsin was clearly elated. Many marchers said they had stood with him during the defense of the parliament building, the "White House," in August 1991.

"Now Moscow and Muscovites have decided to raise their voices in defense of the first popularly elected president of Russia," he said.

After the constant drubbing by the Congress of People's Deputies, his own speech on Saturday and the grief over the death of his mother last weekend, the welcome by the crowd seemed to energize Yeltsin.

"You have come here today at the right time. It's the day when the destiny of the president, the destiny of the Supreme Soviet, is decided, as well as the destiny of Russia and the Russian people," he said.

Yeltsin assured his supporters he would stand firm for the people who elected him as Russia's first democratically chosen president in June 1991.

"I will not obey" any Congress vote to remove him, he said. "I obey only the will of the people."

After the impeachment attempt failed, Yeltsin returned to the square, where the rally had dwindled to several thousand supporters.

"A Communist coup has failed. The people have won," he said.

On the other side of Red Square, about 5,000 pro-Communist demonstrators waving red flags rallied in support of the Congress and the restoration of the Soviet Union.

Hundreds of police prevented them from crossing the square or marching down streets toward the pro-Yeltsin rally.

Russian congress unable to oust president or parliament speaker

After dramatic day Yeltsin remains in power, but he faces April referendum

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Both President Boris Yeltsin and his chief political rival claimed victory Sunday after surviving an attempt by the Russian Congress to remove them from office.

But the secret ballot by the Congress of People's Deputies left the country's political crisis unresolved after a dramatic day of rejected compromise and huge street rallies.

"A communist coup has failed. The people have won," Yeltsin told thousands of cheering supporters outside the Kremlin after the vote.

Waving his fist, he then led the crowd in a chant of "Russia! Russia! Russia!"

Despite the euphoria, Yeltsin is now in the same predicament he faced before the Congress convened Friday. He vowed to press ahead with an April 25 referendum to resolve his power struggle with the parliament, dominated by former Communists who want to slow his free-market reforms.

The parliament's electoral commission announced 617 legislators cast their ballots for Yeltsin's ouster, short of the 689 votes, or two-thirds of the Congress, needed to remove him.

Only 339 lawmakers voted to replace his rival, parliament speaker Ruslan Khasbulatov. At least 517 votes, a simple majority of the 1,033-member Congress, would have been needed to replace the 50-year-old parliament leader.

The vote followed Congress' rejection of a compromise proposed by Yeltsin and Khasbulatov in an effort to end their political battle.

The compromise enraged the legislators because it would have eliminated the Congress — and their jobs — in favor of a smaller, bicameral legislature.

After the vote was announced, the Congress adjourned until Monday. Khasbulatov thanked the legislators for their support and said he was surprised by the outcome.

"During the three years that I have filled this post ... I thought many more deputies had reason to be dissatisfied with me," he said.

Khasbulatov added that the voting signaled the need for a change in Yeltsin's economic reforms. "When an enormous number of deputies ... almost remove the president from office, we all have to think about this signal very seriously," he said.

Also Sunday, Yeltsin issued a series of decrees aimed at helping the people who have been hit hardest by his economic reforms.

The measures double the minimum wage, increase allowances for students and the disabled, improve health-care funding for government workers and give regional governments the right to stabilize skyrocketing prices for basic goods.

Yeltsin earlier told a crowd of about 50,000 supporters who rallied outside the Kremlin that he would not step down, even if the Congress voted to oust him.

"I will obey only the will of the people," he said as he raised a clenched fist while standing on a platform under the domes of St. Basil's Cathedral.

Hard-liners had been seeking Yeltsin's ouster since his March 20 declaration of emergency rule. But on the first two days of the Congress, they failed to collect enough votes to put the question on the agenda. Outrage over the compromise proposal finally gave them the simple majority needed to call Sunday's vote.

The Yeltsin-Khasbulatov proposal also would have called new presidential and legislative elections in November and would have canceled the April referendum that Yeltsin called.

The Congress, elected in 1990 before the Soviet Union's collapse, has been steadily eroding Yeltsin's authority and blocking his free-market reforms. Khasbulatov, once a Yeltsin ally, used his speaker's position to develop his own power base.

Sunday's developments began with a surprise announcement of the compromise as the Congress convened for the third day of its emergency session in the Grand Kremlin Palace.

Khasbulatov said the compromise was devised Saturday night by himself, Yeltsin, Prime Minister Viktor Chernomyrdin and key lawmakers.

But a parade of spokesmen for various parliamentary factions quickly took the podium to denounce the deal.

"Yesterday you said Russia has grown tired of us. Probably that's true, but excuse me, we've grown tired of you," hard-line leader Vladimir Isakov said to Khasbulatov.

A clause in the proposed compromise said that even after the Congress was abolished, deputies would retain their privileges — such as free travel inside Russia — until the end of their terms in 1996.

"That's an attempt at a bribe," hard-liner Nikolai Ogorodnikov said.

Escorts provide safe walk home

MARK JONES
Collegian

Walking alone across campus after dark can be scary and dangerous, so to assist those who must venture out in the dark alone, Goodnow and Haymaker Halls offer escort services.

Angie Kimminau, sophomore in wildlife biology, said she uses the escort services when she gets off work late at night.

"It gives me someone to walk home with and makes me feel better walking through the middle of campus," Kimminau said.

"They just talk to you. They don't make you feel like they are overprotecting you. They just walk you where you need to go," she said.

Both Haymaker and Goodnow offer their escort services primarily to increase campus safety.

"It's one of the things we can do until things get better. Obviously there shouldn't be assault, rapes and attacks, but aside from education and law enforcement, there isn't much else we can do," Dan Merson, Goodnow Hall escort coordinator, said.

Demand for escorts changes with the season and time of semester.

Chris Ettiger, Haymaker Hall escort service coordinator, said the biggest demand is during finals week.

"It goes up quite a bit with everyone going to take tests and study," Ettiger said.

The beginning of each semester also draws more escorts.

There are more escorts at the start of new semesters because there are new residents who have not yet found friends they can walk with, Merson said.

Periods of bad weather also have less demand for escorts.

This is partially due to people going out less, Ettiger said. He said he is concerned people may not call because they do not want to inconvenience someone else.

The thought of creating an inconvenience for an escort should not be a factor in deciding to call, he said.

"These guys volunteered to do it. That's what they're here for," he said.

Quentin Guhr, an escort for the Goodnow service, said weather and time of day does not bother the escorts.

"When I became an escort, I knew the responsibilities. If I didn't want to escort in all kinds of circumstances, I wouldn't have volunteered," Guhr said.

Both Haymaker and Goodnow have strict guidelines for selecting their escorts.

"We screen them to make sure character-wise they will be good escorts, and to make sure it is something they really want to do," Merson said.

"There should not be a need for escort services," he said. "But as long as there is the risk of assault, the escort services will exist."

ENTERTAINMENT

Cosby avoids talking waste, more interested in track

BREN WORKMAN
Collegian

Bill Cosby's television show "You Bet Your Life" had a very short life, indeed. It was canceled, but not before Cynthia Riemann, senior in industrial engineering, had her shot at the big money.

The TV game show taped a special 'scholars' episode, where scholarship awardees from across the country competed on the show.

The episode was the next to last show to be taped before "You Bet Your Life" slipped into game-show oblivion.

Riemann was contacted by a contestant coordinator about doing the show after the official saw her picture in "USA Today" as an All-USA College Academic First Team awardee.

"There were three couples of contestants, and they were all 'USA Today' scholarship winners," Riemann said.

The coordinators flew her out one day, taped the show the next and flew her back on the third day.

"The whole experience went by quite quickly," Riemann said. "I went, we did the show, and I came back."

So, what was Bill Cosby like in person?

"I didn't get to speak to him at all until we actually taped the show," Riemann said. "I couldn't even get an autograph before or after the show."

"When I first met him, I was somewhat in awe," Riemann said. "He has a certain aura of greatness about him."

She said Bill Cosby was joking with her partner most of the time.

"My partner, Randy Pinkett, was an engineering student from Rutgers College and was a NCAA high jump and long jump star," Riemann said. "I guess it was easier for Cosby to talk to him about track and field than it was to ask me about a specialty of mine, like waste minimization."

The aggressive security in the studio surprised her, she said.

"I had to ask to go to the rest room and be escorted everywhere," Riemann said. "If I would have talked to any of the staff, I would have been disqualified."

Riemann and her partner got the first two questions correct, but they lost most of their money on the final question.

"I went there having already decided that I was going for the big money or nothing," Riemann said. "We bet big on the third question concerning White Hall Street in London and lost most of our money."

Bill Cosby helped them recoup some of their losses by lending assistance on the "secret word."

"The 'secret word' was professor, and Bill had to coax my partner pretty hard to get him to say it," Riemann said. "Once he said it, the little bird dropped down from above and we got our $500 dollars."

Riemann said the show should be aired sometime soon, but no local stations carry the game show. Kansas City is the closest place it will be aired.

When asked if she thought the taping of the show went well, Riemann said, "I'm not really sure. I have never seen the show myself."

Pianists to perform different repertoire symbolize certain children's games," she said. "Slavonic Dances" by Antonin Dvorak is another example of music written for piano and later orchestrated. Houser said these are often heard and enjoyed in both forms.

"Variations on a Theme by Haydn" by Johannes Brahms will be the final piece. Houser and Wingfield said they agree this is one of the masterpieces of the concert.

"Brahms is really a masterpiece in the two-piano repertoire. It will certainly be the central piece," Wingfield said.

The other two pieces on the program were first written for symphony and later transcribed so they could be played in four-hand piano. They are "William Tell Overture" by G. Rossini and the second movement of Tchaikovsky's Symphony VI, "Allegro Con Grazia."

"These will be the pieces that people will recognize," Wingfield said. "I think it's going to be a very enjoyable concert. We tried not to make it too heavy and more listener-friendly."

Houser also said she thought the audience would enjoy the performance.

"Four-hand literature in the 19th century was a way for people to enjoy music from all sorts of sources, and it's also a great way for two pianists to get together and just play for fun," Houser said.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

It's what she sees in you, not what she hears in your voice

DEAR CASSANDRA,

A few weeks ago, I was at a local bar and met a very special girl. "Morgan" was friendly, funny, attractive and intelligent. We seemed to hit it off pretty well. So, later that weekend I called her to see if she wanted to go out. To my chagrin though, when I talked to her on the phone she didn't even seem to remember who I was. I've called her a few times since then to see if she'll change her mind about going out, but I usually get her answering machine, and even though I've left my number, she has yet to call me back.

Cassandra, my question is, should I keep asking her out, or should I just give up? I really think that if I could get her to go out with me once, she'd see what a nice guy I am, and it might be the start of a meaningful relationship. I thought I made a good first impression, and the only explanation I can think of for her disdain is my voice, which is somewhat low and raspy due to a childhood accident. From talking to her, she seems sensitive and not superficial — like a lot of the girls I've met — but if she's snubbing me because of my voice it would really shatter me. I'd really appreciate any advice you could give me.

L.G.

DEAR G,

I really doubt that your voice is the problem. You're probably overly self-conscious about it. Perhaps she hadn't received your messages or was unable to call.

Try one more time, and make sure you talk to her personally. Ask her out on an unusual or creative date — not the usual trip to the movie and a bar. If she declines, take the hint and let it go at that.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I need your opinion about a matter that really perplexes me.

It's the sexual double standard that exists between men and women. I am in no way promiscuous. However, sometimes I have desires just like men do. That is only natural, right? To lose my shirt or mash or even have sex — is there anything wrong with those activities if two people are consenting adults and care for each other?

I don't think so, but if women initiate the activity, some (most) guys think we are being aggressive, and they think we are only wanting sex like a quick fix. We are nice girls with physical urges — what's wrong with that? Men simply don't respect girls who take initiative physically.

I am not promoting gratuitous sex. I am referring specifically to girls and guys starting relationships as boyfriends and girlfriends. This is the '90s, and I believe sexual initiations should be an equal responsibility.

Do men really still think they always need to be in charge and be the dominant figure sexually? Don't they know that nice girls aren't always home by 9 p.m. with a handshake? I think men need to redefine equality to include sexual aspects. Help!

Respectfully,

Scarlet O'Hara

DEAR SCARLET,

I see what you are getting at, and I agree.

I'll answer your many questions in order.

No, I don't think there is anything wrong with mashing, losing shirts (however, replacing them can get expensive) or even having sex. The physical relationships two people choose to share is their own business. The sexual double standard is, of course, ridiculous. Men and women naturally have sexual urges. We need them to make sure there are plenty of new men and women. For men to suggest women are any less moral for having the same sexual urges they do is preposterous. After all, it takes two to tango.

I think most men secretly enjoy women who share the "responsibility" for initiating intimacy — it takes off some of the pressure and keeps life interesting.

If men and women spent more time enjoying each other instead of worrying about what role they need to play, they'd be much happier. It sounds like you've realized this. Don't let the archaic and narrow attitudes make you feel guilty about how you choose to conduct your relationships. You only have to answer to yourself.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for. Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Plan could restructure financial aid system

"This is a program at the heart and soul of President Clinton's plan," he said. "It's a chance for young people to prove the critics wrong — that this is the generation that can make a difference."

Brian Hesse, sophomore in political science and history and student coordinator for the YES (Youth Education Service) program with the CSP, said the president's national service plan is much-needed.

"I know numerous people that would like to participate in directly benefiting the community but have to support themselves and cannot commit to the program," Hesse said.

Hesse said he hopes Clinton's plan will operate through established community service programs.

"The only negative thing is people being told what kind of community service to do," he said. "People should be able to choose because sincerity is crucial for community service to be successful."

Although community-service workers are excited about Clinton's proposal, others are apprehensively awaiting further details.

"A couple parts are questionable," said Larry Moeder, director of Student Financial Assistance at K-State. "We've not been in favor of direct lending."

Moeder said his main concern was fund availability and cited the Pell Grant as an example of a program with funding problems.

"We're concerned about the availability of funds from the federal government once the funding source is removed from the private sector," he said.

Moeder said there are positive aspects to the plan.

"Parts of the plan will be very beneficial to students," he said. "It would allow (students) to be able to afford to repay their student loan."

Moeder also praised the income contingent repayment plan.

"The pay would be geared more toward their ability," he said. "It should help to reduce national default rates because students would be given appropriate ways to work off their loan."

Moeder said the program might open up other avenues of study to students because they wouldn't have as great a need to find a job in a lucrative profession.

However, he said the success of the pilot direct lending program, scheduled to go into effect in 1994, will help determine the potential effects of the restructuring of the financial aid system.

"It concerns the schools to throw out the largest student loan program," he said.

Theresa Miller, vice president in charge of student loans at Sunflower Bank, said the bank would find other means of investment, but she is concerned about the effect of the proposed direct lending program.

"I think it would be harder on the University," Miller said. "We (bankers) are probably more experts at collections, and (colleges) getting students into that mode of payment is going to be difficult."

Programs offer local service option

Homeserve, an approved RSVP (Retired Senior Volunteer Program), matches students with local older residents who need regular home maintenance, small repairs and companionship.

Summer Teams assigns students to teams, which spend eight weeks during the summer working on projects designed by community leaders. Each team consists of three to five K-State students, who are assisted by a faculty adviser.

International Teams enables students to spend eight to 10 weeks living and working in an international host community during the summer. Students, who prepare for the cross-cultural experience with a spring-semester seminar, work on developmental projects designed by community leaders.

Trost said students should realize the benefits of participating in community service.

"A lot of students are really focused on academics," she said. "But there are ways to expand our knowledge outside of the classroom."

Students interested in becoming a part of the CSP can contact the CSP office in Eisenhower 014A or at 532-5701.

Cease-fire agreement brings hope for countries

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — A cease-fire took place across ravaged Bosnia-Herzegovina on Sunday, and a U.N. convoy pushed through snowy roads to carry food and medicine to the besieged Muslim enclave of Srebrenica.

Alija Izetbegovic, president of Bosnia's Muslim-led government, said he would give Bosnian Serbs 10 to 15 days to accept the U.N.-sponsored peace plan he signed last week.

The truce — the longest in a year of fighting — followed two of the quietest days of the civil war, slightly raising hopes that this cease-fire might stick. Earlier accords collapsed quickly.

"These have been the first six hours of peace in a year," Manojlo Milovanovic, chief-of-staff of the Bosnian Serb forces, told the Associated Press. "I'm very satisfied."

Bosnian government forces expressed skepticism of the Serbs' sincerity in upholding the truce, which was arranged separately from the U.N.-sponsored peace talks in New York.

"The cease-fire has been the longest so far — a whole seven hours," Bosnian deputy commander Ziam Backovic said. "Have they cleaned their weapons in the meantime?"

More than 130,000 people have been killed or are missing in the war over Bosnia's secession from Serb-dominated Yugoslavia. About 2 million have fled their homes.

Just five minutes before the truce, three people were killed and five were seriously wounded in brief shelling near the presidency building in downtown Sarajevo, Bosnian radio said. Backovic said that showed the mood of Serb militiamen.

Seven shells hit the airport in Tuzla just after noon, damaging two helicopters, said British Maj. Martin Waters, an officer with U.N. peacekeeping troops based in that northeastern city. British and French forces later flew their helicopters out of Tuzla, he said.

The U.N. command in Kiseljak, just outside Sarajevo, reported no other cease-fire violations.

Debate team in the running for national championship

The teams with the best records advanced to the next round of the tournament. The second round of the tournament begins with 64 teams, with the winner of each debate advancing. K-State sent four teams into the field of 64.

At the end of debating on Sunday, K-State had two teams advancing into the final eight. K. J. Wall, junior in speech, and Jill Baisinger, senior in history, make up one team. The other consists of Jason Klein, junior in history, and Dave Devereaux, junior in arts and sciences.

Individual awards were announced at the conclusion of the debating on Sunday. K-State's top four debaters all placed in the top 20, with Baisinger taking third. Baisinger also was named an Academic All-American for the second year in a row. Wall was named to the All-American debate team.

extraordinary are considered special collections. One unusual collection is a miniature books collection that includes a book as small as a thumbnail. One of the oldest books in the collection is "Missale Ordinis Sancti Benedicti," published in 1498.

The largest collection is the cookery collection, which has more than 4,000 volumes dating from the 16th century to present day. The collection includes one book that cannot be found anywhere else in the world.

Collections such as the Philosophical Transactions of London's Royal Society go back to 1666 and have original descriptions of discoveries such as Halley's comet.

"People can examine these beautiful and original printings and link them to present day," Vander Velde said. "They can see the ideas in their original form."

When Farrell expands, Crawford said, archives and special collections also will expand. It will remain on the fifth floor but move to the center of the floor and be able to use stack level eight for storage of documents that are currently in the library annex.

Although material in the archives and special collections can only be viewed in the department's room, Vander Velde said that did not mean they were unavailable.

"A lot of people think these books are restricted or are too fragile to look at, but they are here for people to use," Vander Velde said.

Crawford said he agreed with Vander Velde.

"We collect and preserve this material so everyone in the campus community can use it," Crawford said. "This is not a sanctuary that people cannot come in and use."

Debaters are national champions

"This proves we are a good team because you don't just run like this regularly."

JOHN BURTIS DIRECTOR OF THE FORENSICS TEAM

KARREY BRITT
Collegian

K-State won the national debate championship Monday, making it the team's second win in three years.

The team of Jill Baisinger, senior in history, and K.J. Wall, junior in speech, beat Emporia State University for the National Cross Examination Debate Association tournament championship at Towson State in Maryland.

"I think it is excellent the K-State debate team won the team championship," University President Jon Wefald said. "It is another example of the outstanding students we have here at K-State."

John Burtis, director of the forensics team, also said he was very proud of the team. He said this is K-State's fourth straight year in the final four and that no other school has been able to match this.

"Whatever the size of the school, we have to compete at the same level, and we keep doing this," Burtis said. "This proves we are a good team because you don't just run like this regularly."

Burtis said he was also proud that four of the 10 team members were women. He said it is hard to find female and minority debaters and that their presence was something of which he was very proud.

"Debate is a male dominating competition," he said. "About 80 percent of debaters are male. So with Baisinger being part of the winning team, this is something to be very proud of. I don't believe she debated a female competitor once."

The tournament began on Friday, with 221 teams competing. During the opening round of the tournament, each team debated in eight matches. Five K-State teams competed in the opening round.

The teams with the best records advanced to the next round of the tournament. The second round of the tournament began with 64 teams, with the winner of each debate advancing. K-State sent four teams into the field of 64.

Besides Baisinger and Wall, the team of Jason Klein, junior in history, and David Devereaux, junior arts and sciences, also advanced to the final 16. They

Freshman died Saturday from gunshot

JARED SAVAGE

A K-State student died of an apparent self-inflicted gunshot wound last Saturday at his home in Norton.

Eric Haskins, freshman in business administration, was a member of the Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity.

"We don't know why he did it," Jeff Tauscher, president of TKE, said. "He talked about living in the house next year and plans he had for this summer. He didn't show any sign at all."

Haskins was to be Homecoming co-chair for next year, he said.

A funeral service is scheduled for 1:30 pm Wednesday at Trendy Episcopal Church in Norton.

"We're encouraging everyone who knew him to go to the funeral. The house is taking a caravan down," Tauscher said.

The house has gotten together to deal with Haskins' death.

"As far as bringing someone into the house, we aren't doing that," Tauscher said. "We got together and went over everything and told everyone who was close to him where they could get help if they needed it."

When asked about Haskins, Tauscher said, "He was a really good guy. It's a tragedy that it happened. Nobody likes it when it does happen."

Fifth pair seeks student leadership

Fred Wingert, senior in business administration, answers a question while announcing his bid for student body president with his running mate Jeff Peterson, junior in animal sciences and industry, in Weber Hall Monday afternoon. They said the Wingert/Peters ticket will address parking problems and book buy-backs, among other issues.

The race for student body president and vice president got hotter Monday as a fifth pair of candidates announced they would run for the offices.

With only two weeks left until the election, Fred Wingert, junior in business administration, and Jeff Peterson, junior in animal science and industry, are running for student body president and vice president, respectively.

However, the fact they are the fifth pair to announce doesn't worry the candidates.

"It will be apparent in the way we run our campaign we will reach out to students, all students," Peterson said. "They're going to see our desire to work."

Wingert said they have been talking with students and listening to their concerns for a few weeks now.

"We're going to try over the next 2-1/2 weeks to get out and talk to as many students as we can," Wingert said. "We've been listening for three and four years respectively what students are concerned about."

"We began this effort by going out first and listening to students and hearing their concerns, and we decided together as a team we can tackle some of the issues that are basic to the students at Kansas State," he said.

Both were raised on family farms, Wingert said, and both have lived in residence halls and off campus. Participation in Recreational Services programs, part-time jobs and Student Senate give them unique perspectives for the jobs, he said.

Teamwork will be important in the campaign, Peterson said.

"With this being the first year for a vice presidential candidate, I think teamwork is going to play a very important role," Peterson said. "Fred and I've known each other for many years — we share a lot of the same values and ideas, but we're not afraid to disagree. We feel that this ability to get along and know each other will help us.

"I guess I feel my role as vice president will be to reach out to the students. That's where I feel I fit in," Peterson said. Wingert and Peterson see the book buy-back process as being one of the most important to this campaign.

"Students subsidize the Union $800,000 a year through their Union student fee. We go and sell our books back and receive such a small portion for what we pay for the books," Wingert said. "We'd like to take our governing authority and make the book buy-back process fair again."

They have already taken some initiative into solving the problem.

"We've already spoken with the director of the Union. We'd like to sit down with him and thoroughly discuss the book buy-back process," Wingert said.

If the Union's prices were more fair, Varney's Bookstore would be forced to revise their process also, Wingert said, because they would lose business if they did not.

A major student concern is job opportunities, Peterson said. The job market is a big concern to K-State students, he said.

"What we like to do is set up a program called the Alumni Connection in all of the colleges at K-State. It would be run through the ambassador program, and ambassadors would call recent alumni of K-State that are working and set up internships lead to K-State job opportunities."

A popular issue this campaign has been parking. Wingert said he wants to ► FIRE DAMAGES 2 CAMPUS OFFICES

RON LACKEY

A fire severely damaged two offices in Throckmorton Hall last Wednesday morning.

While most students were on break, the Manhattan Fire department responded to a blaze at 10 a.m. on the second floor of Throckmorton Hall.

"The contractors were cutting on the west wall where the new and old sections connect. They were cutting metal, and a spark fell into the old section and caught some insulation on fire," Randy Slover, director of building maintenance, said.

"The offices sustained pretty good damage. The contractors will pick up the cost," he said. "They took full responsibility and did a pretty good job about getting it contained."

Although it was during spring break, Slover said Throckmorton was occupied at the time of the blaze.

"We evacuated the building, turned on the fans, cleared out the smoke, and the custodians cleaned up the mess," Slover said.

Faculty go on strike in Cincinnati

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CINCINNATI — Unionized faculty members went on strike Monday at the University of Cincinnati at the start of the spring semester.

Administrators of the 35,000-student state university, Ohio's second largest, said its representatives found that more than 60 percent of the classes were being taught. Picket lines also were crossed by members of other unions on the campus, Cincinnati's largest employer with 19,000 workers.

But the striking American Association of University Professors said students reported that fewer than half the classes were being taught. Both sides reported that student attendance was light.

The strike began after a 14-hour negotiating session Sunday involving a state mediator failed. No new talks were scheduled immediately.

The union represents 1,916 full-time faculty members at the main and branch campuses, and the medical and law schools but fewer than 800 of them actually belong to the union. Their average annual salary is $51,000.

The union doesn't represent 2,100 part-time teachers and 130 administrators who teach courses.

The administration said salary was the only issue and that the school had offered a three-year contract with pay increases of 2 percent, 4 percent and 5 percent for the contract years.

Union officials said the union also wants to keep its say in how the university is run, particularly for changes that would affect faculty working conditions and access to academic leaves.

Clinton's jobs bill gains approval after cuts

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton and conservative Democrats settled their dispute over the administration's $16.3 billion jobs bill on Monday but promptly suffered a setback that showed the measure would not be easy to push through the Senate.

Ending a standoff that began last Thursday, conservatives agreed to back the legislation after Clinton sent them a letter noting that much of the spending would not occur until later this year and pledging to pressure Congress to meet its deficit-reduction goals.

No sooner had the Democratic peace pact been reached than the Senate gave preliminary 48-44 approval to a Republican provision slicing $104 million from the bill. But with seven Democratic senators having missed the evening vote, Democrats eager to erase the surprising defeat scheduled a second vote on the amendment for Tuesday.

The GOP provision, aimed at embarrassing Clinton, would forbid the bill from being used for tennis courts and other projects for which the nation's mayors have sought federal funds.

Five Democrats deserted and voted "no": Sens. James Exon and Robert Kerrey, both D-Neb.; Bob Graham, D-Fla.; Sam Nunn, D-Ga.; and Richard Shelby, D-Ala.

When the outcome became clear, Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., the jobs measure's sponsor, voted for the GOP amendment, giving him the right to seek a second vote, which he did.

Your Q. & A. About Student Financial Assistance

Q: Where is the Financial Aid Office located?

A: The office of Student Financial Assistance is located in Fairchild 104 and is handicap accessible by using the east ground floor entrance and elevators.

Q: How do I apply for Financial Aid at K-State?

A: You may pick up the free application for Federal Student Aid at Fairchild 104 between 9:00 a.m. and 4:45 p.m. (Yes, the office is open through the noon hour.) If you can't make it to our office during business hours, you may pick up a financial application outside our door at any time.

Q: Whom can I talk to if I have questions about the Financial Aid process?

A: The Financial Aid office is giving you the perfect opportunity to visit with someone—in person—during their open house April 5th through April 9th. Our entire office is looking forward to visiting with the students at K-State. We invite students to drop by and get acquainted.

Q: What happens during "Open House"?

A: The professional staff—including directors—will be available to answer your questions. Feel free to ask about the forms, application process, or any of the Federal Aid programs.

Q: Where do I leave my financial aid paperwork? Do you have a drop box?

A: Our office has two drop boxes. One is located outdoors by the parking meters in front of Fairchild Hall. The second drop box is located indoors near our office entrance at Fairchild 104 and is handicap accessible. Of course, you may always mail your paperwork or leave it with one of our reception area staff.

Farrell floor plans will be displayed

KEVIN STRECKER
Collegian

The new floor plans for Farrell Library will be presented from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. in the K-State Union Courtyard today.

"The floor plans will be presented as they are currently developed," Brice Hobrock, dean of Libraries, said.

"There won't be any presentations," Hobrock said. The displays will be set up so students can drop by and see the floor plans.

"All questions or comments will be welcomed by the architects," Hobrock said.

The architects who will be present are Brent Bowman and Patrick Schaub from Bowman Associates, as well as Jeff Terrell from HBB in Chicago.

"The library is in its third phase of development," Hobrock said. "The first phase was establishment or the way it looks. The second was formal approval or the placement of all functions into the allocated space. And we are now in the third phase called design development, which is the placement of all the walls internally."

Tom Bell, sophomore in pre-occupational therapy, said, "I am looking forward to seeing the new plans. It has been such an issue over the past year, and the students need to be informed on any progress."

Hobrock said construction should begin in about a year.

Peace activist Casolo to revisit University

WENDY BARRETT
Collegian

Jennifer Casolo, a peace activist and church worker imprisoned by the army of El Salvador in 1989, will speak at 7:30 tonight in Union 212.

The speech titled, "How to Keep on Making a Difference," is being presented by the Manhattan Alliance for Peace and Justice and the K-State Women's Studies Department.

"When she spoke at K-State two years ago, the students really enjoyed listening to her. They said she was the only speaker who gave them something to really think about in their lives," Marlene Howell, instructor of women's studies, said.

Casolo was in El Salvador as a solidarity worker, helping educate the poor and influencing them to become involved in political issues, Howell said.

She made national news after being arrested in El Salvador on false charges of harboring weapons, she said. Casolo had not been supportive of the U.S. policy in El Salvador.

Her appearance in Manhattan is timely, coming amid publicity surrounding the United Nations Truth Commission on El Salvador, Howell said. The commission found that officials in the army and government of El Salvador condoned widespread murder and other atrocities inflicted on civilians during the civil war of the 1980s.

ORGANIZATIONS

Society funds leadership retreat

MICHELLE HAUPT
Collegian

Many students spent spring break in the sun or snow, but several K-Staters spent their breaks in Kansas City honing their leadership skills.

The K-State Chapter of Society of Hispanic Professional Engineers was host to a regional leadership retreat in Kansas City, March 26-28.

Robert Soria, junior in mathematics, is president of this 10-member organization that has been at K-State for seven years.

He said SHPE is open to students in engineering and science-related fields and helps maintain support for Spanish engineers as well as recruit new members to the organization.

"We provide an opportunity to develop leadership and organizational skills," Soria said.

Soria said the retreat is an annual event, and the hosting team is in charge of funding the conference and organizing hotel accommodations.

"Generally, the retreat provides us with essentials to communicate within the chapter and the corporate world," Soria said. "We learn a lot."

Jerri Lopez, freshman in chemical engineering and SHPE secretary, said the retreat went well.

Lopez said there were nine schools, including K-State, that attended the retreat. She said the five Colorado schools and three New Mexico schools that participated gave positive feedback.

"Students from Colorado and New Mexico were impressed with Kansas City," Lopez said.

Lopez said corporate representatives gave workshops in team building, recruiting and motivation, networking and fundraising.

Not only did the retreat participants attend workshops, but they toured Hallmark's corporate headquarters in Kansas City.

"I found it really interesting," Lopez said. "They are a lot more than just greeting cards."

Soria said one of his goals is to develop a professional chapter for SHPE. He said representatives from the Environmental Protection Agency and the Federal Aviation Administration attended the retreat to learn more about the organization and the formation of a professional chapter.

"This will help us to make corporate contacts and possibly create financial support in the future," Soria said.

COLUMNS

Columns are the opinions of only the columnist. They do not reflect the views of the Kansas State Collegian, but instead offer a differing viewpoint.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Rooting for KU — a necessary evil

THE ISSUE

It is the innate nature of every true K-Stater to loathe our neighbors and bitter rivals, the University of Kansas Jayhawks.

WE SUGGEST

Bite the bullet and root for KU. Their gains could bring good things to K-State.

Go, Jayhawks.

Lord knows that's a painful statement to write. We at the Collegian hate the University of Kansas Jayhawks as much as any self-respecting Wildcat. Cut our veins — we bleed purple.

Nonetheless, we hope the Jayhawks win the NCAA basketball tournament. The benefits of such far outweigh the negatives.

First, the Jayhawks are the only Big Eight school left in the tournament. Their continued success equals respect for the conference.

Simply put, should the Jayhawks win the national championship, K-State can claim that they beat the national champs. That kind of victory sends a message that we're a team to be reckoned with to potential basketball recruits and students alike.

Second, there's a financial benefit as well. The further the Jayhawks advance, the more money they receive from the NCAA.

Under the Big Eight conference rules, K-State and other conference schools receive a share of that money. Should the Jayhawks win it all, that amount would be a tidy little sum.

In a time when both students and alumni are feeling the financial pinch, any money the folks in Lawrence can provide us with is welcome indeed.

So, go, Jayhawks. Win it all. Provide the Big Eight and especially K-State with money and respect.

Next year, we'll return the favor.

Sink or sink: A dilemma, Pt. II

The first article in this series pointed out some of the pitfalls of the publish-or-perish model that is now the norm in the College of Arts and Sciences. In essence, every professor at the rank of assistant and above needs to accomplish significant research and publication in order to advance in rank or pay. Quality teaching is presumed. But it is not rewarded. Why not?

DAVID

Students may not be aware that at K-State, faculty contracts are actually only letters of appointment. They do not specify any amount, nor any quality, of teaching performance. Personnel are hired at the rank of instructor, assistant, associate or full professor, but how much classroom professing is to be done — and how the quality of it is to be measured — is left up to negotiation between faculty members and the department head or chairperson.

Such an arrangement offers desirable flexibility. I must admit that I rarely feel that the TEVAL student course evaluations get at the essence of what I hope to accomplish in a course. Students looking for an easy continuation of high school are put off by teachers who refuse to spoon-feed facts and instead ask the learner to think. Challenging courses, and those where the grading is stringent, sometimes get lower evaluations than they deserve. So, even those professors who continue to care about good teaching have reason not to rely too heavily on student course evaluations as a measure of their success.

When a vacancy occurs in a given academic department, position announcements are placed seeking professors to teach courses in certain content areas, at least partly reflecting student course demand. But because good teaching is neither valued nor rewarded in the way that research and publication are, the "real" job is not the teaching load being advertised.

Imagine a restaurant that puts a "Help Wanted" sign in its window. You might rightly assume that they need more people to cook the food or run the cash registers, to further the goal of serving hot meals efficiently to the customers who have arrived seeking precisely those qualities. You wouldn't expect the restaurant instead to offer a job studying and writing reports on how gray a pickle can be before it's not perceived as a pickle anymore, only secondarily serving the customers waiting out front. But that's what universities do when they haven't figured out how to value and reward teaching.

In business management, the book "In Search of Excellence" popularized the idea that managers need to be "close to the customer" — they need to discover and then let themselves be driven by customers' needs. The problem with the college succumbing to the publish-or-perish model is that it puts professors farther from their customers, the students.

When everything — tenure, promotion and merit-pay increases — rides primarily on publication, the customers are not the students who enroll in courses, but professors elsewhere who decide whether a K-State professor gets published. Because students aren't the customers, too much of higher education consists of boring classes staffed by people who obviously don't want to be there. And when student course evaluations come up short, those results are discounted by academic administrators because students aren't their peers.

Articles from recent issues of "The Chronicle of Higher Education" offer some good advice. One by Martin Nemko is titled "A Blueprint for Creating a Truly Useful College Guide" (Feb. 3, 1993, p. B-4). Among the questions Nemko would ask in compiling his guide to good colleges are these:

Are student evaluations of faculty members published and widely available to students? Such publications help students choose good instructors, and their presence suggests that an institution is more concerned about students' rights to a good education than it is about covering up professors' failings. ...

In general, if a faculty member is a fairly weak teacher and a good researcher, will he or she get tenure?

In spite of my misgivings about the validity and reliability of student course evaluations, I nevertheless would rather see them published widely, regularly and proudly by the faculty and administration. The alternative is for student course evaluations to be largely anecdotal, subjective, clandestine and limited in circulation — all traits that cast students in the role of academic guerrilla-fighters rather than partners in scholarship.

We faculty say we want to help students learn to make informed choices — but then we withhold data about how previous students have reacted to our courses. I would not dream of buying a car without consulting a consumer guide to help me make a sensible choice. But during the length of a college career, we ask students to invest more than the cost of a car to enroll in courses chosen on the basis of little more than hearsay.

Another recent article in the Chronicle is a feature by John V. Lombardi titled "With Their Accounts in Order, Colleges Can Win Back Their Critics" (Feb. 17, 1993, p. A40). Lombardi summarizes the reasons why some institutions have trouble getting the constituent support they seek. He says:

But to succeed, we have to recognize students as significant people whose needs, comfort and success take high priority within the institution. If we choose faculty comfort, administrative convenience and management ease over student satisfaction and success, we deserve to lose the war.

In short, there need to be ways to grant tenure and promotion for either strong teaching, or strong research and publication. We ought to do it to bring teaching up to the level of respect that our student customers are paying for. And increasingly, we will need to do it for competitive reasons.

Tomorrow: Part Three: Competitive Challenges.

PERISCOPE

THE PROGRESS

Another term that has earned a place in the annals of the dominant oxymorons in popular western culture, along with "safe sex," is "progressive liberalism." Few would disagree that our society has become more liberal in the past few decades; the obvious trend in culture is increased openness and acceptance, especially in the realms of sex and the family. The myth, however, is that this growing liberalism has led to progress. William Bennett, Republican thinker, recently compiled an "index of leading cultural indicators" published by the new "Empower America" group.

"Since 1960, population has increased 41 percent; the gross domestic product has nearly tripled, and total social spending by all levels of government has risen from $143.73 billion to $787 billion. Inflation-adjusted spending on education has increased 225 percent.

"But during that same 30-year period, there has been a 560-percent increase in violent crime, more than a 400-percent increase in illegitimate births; a quadrupling of divorce rates; a tripling of the percentage of children in single-parent homes; more than a 200-percent increase in the teen-age suicide rate and a drop of almost 80 points in Scholastic Aptitude Test scores," Bennett said.

Liberalism in culture, coupled with increased government spending, obviously has not progressed society. No, this is not meant to be another column by a conservative moaning about moral decline. I don't believe people were better in the past than they are today. History is littered with murderers, rapists, perverts and bigots. Human nature has remained fairly constant: we are and have always been imperfect creatures plagued by vices. To explain the uniqueness of today's problems, which is best described as "social regression" instead of "moral decline," I'll use an analogy.

As a nation we have removed our workgloves, leaving our hands vulnerable to injury. A callous will form on the part of a hand that is aggravated from hammering a nail, for instance. That callous will grow and disappear, and other callouses will grow and disappear as different parts of the hand are aggravated. So it is with our national conscience. The callous, or desensitization, from racial bigotry is hopelessly receding but the callouses from violent death and sexual perversion are growing.

The reason we should alter our course is because we are damaging ourselves whether we know it or not. It is as if we are a blind paraplegic moving a saw across our leg.

For a while we won't feel the saw slicing through our leg, but eventually it will cut through our bones and ligaments. Then our lifeless, useless leg will fall to the floor, and we'll wonder why we never felt anything. In society, our apathetic, complacent and insensitive attitude toward social problems is allowing us to destroy ourselves before our eyes.

We are being liberalized from the inhibitions that once guarded our most potent urges and desires, allowing us to act on those long-suppressed cravings that are part of everyone's basic human nature. However, the uninhibited release of our urges, especially as they relate to sexual behavior and violent crime, have resulted mainly in pain, suffering and destruction. As a nation we have removed our conscience.

If you want to heal society, you have to heal the people in society first. A change in individual behavior must precede progress in society at large. Such a change cannot occur through external motivators such as gun control laws or multicultural education.

The change in individuals that must take place before society can progress must be internally motivated — people have to want to act in a way that will benefit society. Internal motivation requires a transformation of the heart or soul that can only occur through a spiritual renewal. We need to change from the inside-out. Spiritual transformation alone will lead to moral growth. Then, we can head toward social progress.

PETS

Neuter to prevent pet problems later on

Editor,

On April 1, the Riley County Humane Society, with the cooperation of area veterinarians, will kick off the 1993 Prevent-A-Litter campaign by offering a rebate to assist in the expense of having pets spayed or neutered during the month of April. The coupon will appear in the March 31 Manhattan Mercury.

Each year, millions of healthy cats and dogs are destroyed because there are not enough homes for them. Spaying and neutering our pets can reduce this senseless destruction. Besides preventing unwanted litters of puppies and kittens, there are other benefits to spaying and neutering.

Neutered dogs and cats live longer and have a smaller incidence of health problems that can be very difficult and expensive to treat. It also eliminates the seemingly endless heat cycles of females, as well as the possibility of uterine and ovarian problems.

Please make this important choice for your pet and be a part of the solution to the tragedy of pet overpopulation.

SAFE SEX AWARENESS

Reader condemns praise of condoms

Editor,

Recently on campus, there has been an outburst of "safe sex" awareness mania. A few weeks ago, posters appeared proclaiming "Don't let your luck run out. Use condom sense!" These posters were sponsored by the Health Education and Promotion Department of Lafene Health Center. I would suggest that they start to live up to their title.

It's time we start using common sense instead of condom sense. Studies have shown different data on the effectiveness of a condom in stopping the AIDS virus. Most show an effective range of anywhere between 70 and 80 percent. Even assuming that condoms are 80 percent effective, does a 20-percent failure rate warrant the title "safe"? If there is a 20 percent chance that an airplane will blow up on take-off, would that be considered safe?

How safe is "safe sex"? How many people would have enough faith in condoms to have sex with a known HIV-infected individual with only a thin piece of rubber to protect them? Better yet, how many people in the Health Education and Promotion Department of Lafene could display this much faith in their beloved prophylactics? I doubt many would. Yet they tell us that condoms will protect us.

Give us a break — give us the truth.

Gladney can't call condom use artificial

Editor,

In reading J.A.K. Gladney's column on March 15 titled

"Condoms deconstructed," I was dismayed to note that she is in cultural studies, when in fact her writing displays a sordid lack of cultural perspective on her subject.

First of all, before using the term "deconstructed," the author and/or editor should know what the aesthetic process of deconstruction really means, i.e. dealing with a subject such as text, sign or symbol regarding its independent meaning and function within a specific context.

I also take exception to the author's lack of insight in her references to acting and art. She obviously views acting and art as an external structure and process. Comparing acting to wearing a condom (although rather amusing), and art as artificial, shows a lack of experience or knowledge of the artistic perception or creation. As a student of cultural studies, it might be helpful for her to gain a balanced and inside view of these important elements as defined by individual cultures.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Intramural interlude

DAVID MAYES/Collegian

Jason Jarrett, senior in milling science, returns a serve during a doubles handball match with partner Mark Esfeld, senior in milling science. The two were playing against Bruce Strong, senior in electrical engineering, and Joe Kossar, junior in speech communication, Monday night at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex. All four said they plan to play intramural doubles handball. The last day to sign up for intramural handball is April 1.

Rec services offer break from daily grind

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

Tired of watching the Jayhawks tear up the NCAA Tournament? Sick of mid-terms and 64-page term papers? Ready to cast away the post-spring break blues?

How about a nice game of team handball? Or testing your free-throw abilities with some of K-State's best? Indeed, the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex offers a variety of intramural activities to get one's mind off of the rigors of college life.

"It's a busy month," Steve Martini, director of intramural services, said.

Highlighting the fury of current and upcoming intramural activities is softball. The first batch of the 296 softball teams played last night at the Rec complex softball fields.

"Everybody gets into softball," Martini said. "We're looking forward to another great season."

By teams, softball is the second-most popular sport at the Rec complex. Only basketball, with 313 teams, had more entrants. But by individual, softball — because more people are on each team — has by far the most number of participants.

But there is a drawback. "Softball has the highest forfeit percentage of any of our sports," Martini said. "Due to what, who knows."

Martini said 15 percent of all softball games are decided by forfeit. Football, with a 7-percent forfeit ratio, is next.

"I guess if the weather is really nice, some people decide to go to the lake or whatever and skip their softball games," Martini said. "But I'm not really sure what all the reasons are."

"Hopefully, the forfeits will go down."

Team handball is one of the many team handball is April 1.

"That's a really different sport," Martini said. "It's awfully unusual."

For the die-hard hoop fans who don't want to see the basketball season end, there is the free-throw contest and the three-point shootout.

The free-throw contest is a one-night event, taking place April 4, that includes a 25-shot first round. If the contestants make 15 or more in that first round, they will get to take 25 more in the second round. The three-point shootout, which will be April 18, consists of three rounds. The contestant gets 15 shots in the first round, 20 in the second and five in the third.

The track meet will be at the R.V. Christian Track on April 22-24, and the deadline to sign up is April 15.

Netters not concerned with record

SCOTT ABEL

For Wildcat tennis coach Steve Bietau, it's far from panic-time.

K-State begins its conference schedule against Missouri today at 11 a.m., and the Wildcats limp into Columbia with a 3-9 record against a 6-4 Tiger squad. But Bietau said the team's non-conference record doesn't always show where the season will lead.

"Our record now is 0-0," he said. "The conference schedule is a new ballgame, and it's a new season for us."

"We were 1-7 at one point last year."

And that season ended up as K-State's best. The Wildcats shook off their slow start to finish third in the conference and second in the Big Eight tournament.

So, Bietau hopes the Wildcat's tough non-conference schedule will similarly benefit his young squad starting today.

"When you play a strong schedule, you are forced to raise your level of play," Bietau said. "For our players to survive something like that, they have to kick their play up to another level."

Last season, K-State didn't have to raise its level much to beat the Tigers. The Cats swept Missouri, 9-0.

"We should win," said Martine Shrubsole, who plays the No. 5 singles position for the Wildcats. "They don't give scholarships to their players. I'm hoping we do as well this season."

The match will be K-State's fifth consecutive road trip stretching back into February.

During spring break, the Cats split matches in Indiana with Notre Dame and Purdue.

"Against Purdue we played pretty well," Bietau said. "We were inconsistent at times, but once the players saw we had a chance to win, they relaxed."

"Notre Dame was a completely different story. We just weren't competitive. But that had more to do with the way that Notre Dame was playing," he said.

The Wildcats were smoked 8-0 by the Fighting Irish in South Bend, Ind. No. 1 singles player Susana Labrador was the only Wildcat to get her match as far as a third set.

"Notre Dame is a Top 25 team," Shrubsole said. "We played well, but they just had too much. But we still played well."

So, how far can the Cats go in the Big Eight this year?

"Last year we were more mature as a team," Shrubsole said. "This year we're pretty young, and that has been the difference so far."

"I don't think we'll do as well as we did last year, but I'm hopeful that we'll get in the top four in the Big Eight."

Baseball Cats to face explosive No. 23 OU

20-7 Sooners are averaging 8 runs and 12 hits per game

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

The Oklahoma baseball team shares one similarity with the Sooner basketball team — both can score.

The No. 23 Sooners, 20-7 and 5-0 in the Big Eight, meet the struggling 8-14 K-State Wildcats tonight at 7 at Frank Myers Field.

Oklahoma took three out of four games from the Cats last year in Manhattan.

Averaging eight runs and 12 hits a contest, the Sooners are on a five-game winning streak and reached the 20-win mark for the 25th consecutive year.

The Sooners' outburst of runs is the result of their .341 team batting average — the highest since the school record of .355 average set in 1987.

Yet, K-State coach Mike Clark said his team can win one of the two games today or tomorrow.

"We've got to take care of business and win our home games," said Clark, whose club took one game against Missouri last week. "They lost all of their pitching staff and are 2-4 on the road."

"We are playing good, sound, fundamental ball right now."

The Sooners are as good in batting as they are bad in pitching. The team's earned run average is 5.54, and Coach Larry Cochell has sent 15 pitchers to the mound.

"Oklahoma has been giving up a lot of runs," Clark said. "It's a great time for our offense to get into gear."

In the past five games, Oklahoma has given up 52 runs, an average of more than 10 runs a game.

The Sooners send Matt Williams to the hill. Williams (4-0) leads Oklahoma pitchers in nearly every category but is giving up five runs a game and hasn't won a game since Mar. 19.

Clark said he plans to start Scott Dreiling against Williams.

"I'm becoming more comfortable on the mound," Dreiling, who is 1-2, said. "I didn't get off to a good start early because the weather postponed a couple of games I was supposed to start."

The Cats' defensive woes ended this weekend at Columbia, Mo., where they committed just one error in 26 innings.

Before the weekend series, K-State committed 34 errors in 19 games. But in spite of the better fielding, the Wildcats lost two of three games to the Tigers.

K-State broke three records on defense. In the only win, third baseman Kevin McMullin broke a school record with nine assists, and first baseman Dave Hendrix had 18 putouts.

In the 6-5 loss Sunday, the Cats tied a Big Eight record with four double-plays, tying them with six other teams.

"I think we have the potential to be a very good defensive team," Clark said. "The tough competition has helped us."

"We would be bitten by mistakes, and the teams would capitalize on us. We've been concentrating harder and working on fundamentals."

GOLF

Wildcats finish 1st round near top of the pack

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

The K-State women's and men's golf teams are both in the top three in the 1993 Southwest Missouri State University Invitational after the first round.

The women are leading the nine-team tournament in the first round with a score of 327, and the men are in third place with a two-round score of 606.

"The women's team did well," K-State golf coach Mark Elliott said. "This is a fairly difficult golf course. There are a lot of 10- and 12-foot bunkers."

Valerie Hahn leads the women's team after posting a first-round score of 76. She trails Karen Supples of Arkansas State — whose first-round 73 was a Highland Springs Country Club course record.

Denise Pottle is currently fourth after one round after shooting an 81. Pottle, a junior from Canada, averaged 82.4 strokes-per-round going into the tournament.

Elliott said Hahn and Pottle carried the team the first day.

"Valerie has a good chance of winning," he said. "She hasn't won a tournament in her career."

"Denise is doing well at fourth," Elliott said.

Jacque Wright and Sarah Morehead are tied for 11th after shooting an 85.

Elliott said Morehead, a junior from Clearwater who is competing in her first tournament of the season, fared well.

"That's a good score for Sarah," Elliott said.

The women's team is ahead of second-place Southwest Missouri State, which shot a 338, and the Wildcats have put themselves into a good position to win the tournament.

"I don't see anybody catching us," Elliott said. "We have an 11-stroke lead on the nearest competitor."

Elliott said the men's 54-hole tournament is played on two different courses — the Highland Springs Country Club and Hickory Hills. He said it gave Southwestern Missouri State a home-course advantage.

"Hickory Hills was more difficult because we didn't get to play a practice round," he said.

Elliott said he is optimistic about the second day of play for the men as well.

"We're still in a position to win, but we'll have to play under par tomorrow," he said. "I expect we will play better tomorrow."

Richard Laing has the high score for the men's team with a 148 in the first day of play. That's good for fifth. Brett Waldman follows a close second for the team with a score of 150 and a 10th place standing.

Elliott said Laing and Waldman are both doing well.

"Richard is kind of going through a confidence battle," Elliott said. "But I feel he is a good player and doing well."

Will Siebert is playing in his first tournament of the season. He tied for 14th with 153. Jim Brenneman fired a 155, good for 24th. Sean Fobertson placed 50th with a 163.

Elliott said Fobertson's score does not reflect the way he has been shooting.

"That was not typical of Sean's game," Elliott said. "But hopefully we have it figured out."

Both teams will wrap up the last 18 holes today in Springfield.

SPORTS DIGEST

► ROSSY GIFT WRAPS JAYS' WIN

HAINES CITY, Fla. (AP) — Shortstop Rico Rossy committed two errors in the ninth inning, allowing the Toronto Blue Jays to break a scoreless tie and top the Kansas City Royals 3-0 Monday.

After Paul Molitor led off the inning with a single and John Olerud walked, Rossy made a throwing error on Derek Bell's grounder to load the bases with one out. Ed Sprague hit what could have been an inning-ending double-play grounder to Rossy, who dropped it as he went to tag second base.

Angel Martinez' single to right scored Bell with the final run. Jeff Montgomery was charged with the loss, although all three runs off him were unearned.

Royals starter Hipolito Pichardo checked the Blue Jays on one single in five shutout innings, while striking out five.

Meantime, manager Hal McRae announced Kevin Appier, 15-8 with a 2.46 earned run average last year, would be the opening day starter Monday against Boston. David Cone, Mark Gubicza, Mark Gardner and Pichardo will round out his rotation.

► GEORGETOWN LIMPS INTO FINAL

NEW YORK (AP) — The NIT is a tournament that gives teams a second chance. On Monday night, Georgetown and Alabama-Birmingham played like they didn't deserve one.

The Hoyas scored just 14 points in the first half, but came back from a 17-point deficit and held UAB scoreless for the final nine minutes. The result was a 45-41 victory for Georgetown.

UAB (20-14) had five points over the last 14:40, attempted only two shots and had five turnovers in the last nine minutes.

► MINNESOTA CONTINUES NIT ROLL

NEW YORK (AP) — Voshon Lenard scored 17 of his 25 points in the second half Monday night and Minnesota rallied past Providence 76-70 to reach its second NIT final.

The Gophers (21-10) overcame an 11-point deficit in the second half and used a late 9-0 run to pull away from the Friars (20-12).

Minnesota, an NIT runner-up in 1980, will play Georgetown for the title Wednesday night.

HEALTH CARE

Experimental vaccines to be tested on HIV-infected children

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Researchers will test experimental vaccines on children infected with HIV, the virus that causes AIDS, the National Institutes of Health said Monday.

Three vaccines will be administered to 90 children ages one month to 12 years. The tests will be conducted at hospitals in at least 12 different locations nationwide.

"This is the first time we have tried HIV vaccines on children," NIH spokeswoman Laurie Doepel said.

Health Secretary Donna Shalala said in a statement that the study is "a hopeful milestone in our efforts to ameliorate the tragedy of HIV-infected children who now face the certainty they will develop AIDS."

The tests will be used to help researchers determine if the vaccines slow the progress of the disease by triggering immunological responses to the HIV virus in children who are not yet sick.

Further tests will be conducted if the vaccines prove to be safe, said Anthony Fauci, head of NIH's Office of AIDS Research.

There are about 10,000 children in this country who are infected with the HIV virus, born mostly to women who became infected from intravenous drug use or sexual contact, according to estimates.

At least half the participants will be children 2 years old or younger, to enable researchers to compare their reactions to the vaccine with those of older patients, officials said.

The symptoms of AIDS show up more quickly in children infected with the HIV virus than adults. About half the infants born with the HIV virus develop a serious AIDS-related infection between the ages of 3 and 6. About 10 vaccines have been tested on adults.

Preliminary results of these trials show some of the vaccines increased the body's immunological response to HIV. There have been suggestions that some vaccines might stabilize the loss of CD-4 white-blood cells, scientists said.

The University of Rochester Medical School has received formal approval to begin the tests, and trials of the three experimental HIV vaccines will eventually be conducted at the other sites, said Dr. James McNamara, a medical officer at the National Institute of Allergies and Infectious Diseases.

Each child will receive one shot every four weeks for six months and will be checked for 24 weeks after the last immunization for signs of physical reactions, such as fevers or swelling.

K-State-Salina receives $6 million to fund aviation training center

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — The Department of Defense is releasing $6 million to help finance an aviation training center in Salina operated by K-State.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said he was notified Monday that Defense Secretary Les Aspin had agreed to allow the $6 million to be spent on the training center.

The defense department released $1.7 million last year to start the training center project. Congress had approved the money for the 1992 budget year, which ended last September.

The center in Salina offers pilot training and aircraft maintenance programs. Ten planes, flight simulators, computers and testing equipment will be purchased with the money.

The project "is a winner, a model partnership between higher education, national security and a community dedicated to economic development," Dole said.

The money also should help the aviation industry in Wichita because it is available for the purchase of six Beech Bonanzas, three Beech Barons and one Beech Sundowner, Dole said.

The training center is on the campus of the former Kansas Institute of Technology.

Few surprises at Oscars

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — Wait as long for an Oscar as Clint Eastwood and Al Pacino did, and your throat might go dry, too.

With more than 50 years of acting between them, Eastwood and Pacino finally reached the Academy Awards winners' circle Monday night. Eastwood was cited as director and producer of the best picture winner, the brooding Western "Unforgiven." Pacino's award came for his performance as the embittered blind veteran in "Scent of a Woman."

Both men were greeted with standing ovations. Both looked just a little uneasy as they stepped behind the podium.

"You broke my streak," quipped Pacino, laughing nervously as he admitted he sure could use a drink of water. He then offered a long, rambling list of "Thank you's," apologizing midway by saying, "Indulge me for a minute, because I'm not used to this."

Next up was Eastwood, who had never even been nominated before this year.

"Pacino's throat was dry, and mine was really dry," Eastwood said as he picked up his director's prize. He offered his own compilation of people to thank and continued it when he accepted the Oscar for best picture, even acknowledging his mother, Ruth.

There was little other drama at the Los Angeles Music Center. The biggest surprise was Marisa Tomei's victory in the best supporting actress category. The only other standing ovations went for honorary awards, notably one to Elizabeth Taylor for her work in support of AIDS research.

No single picture emerged as the big winner. "Unforgiven" led with four awards, followed by "Howards End" and Bram Stoker's "Dracula" with three apiece.

Emma Thompson, the free-thinking intellectual who marries into money in "Howards End," was best actress. Tomei won for her role as Joe Pesci's feisty girlfriend in "My Cousin Vinny."

"Unforgiven" brought a supporting actor award to Gene Hackman for his portrayal of a sadistic sheriff and also received the award for film editing.

The ceremonies featured one of the few posthumous awards in Academy history. Audrey Hepburn, who died of cancer earlier this year, was honored with the Jean Hersholt Humanitarian Award for her efforts as UNICEF's ambassador to the world's children. Gregory Peck, co-star of her award-winning "Roman Holiday," was on hand to present the award to her son, Sean Ferrer.

Angela Lansbury was the presenter of the Hersholt Award to Elizabeth Taylor, cited for her crusading efforts in the AIDS crisis. The two actresses appeared together in the 1945 "National Velvet," when both were contract players at MGM.

Hard times found in the shower

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have a problem. I haven't taken a shower in three days. The dormitory I live in has a shower room with four shower heads and no dividers. Now, I enjoy taking showers, but every time I get under that shower head, the water that runs over my body in such a sensual delight that I can't help but get aroused. Now, for a female that is not much of a problem, but when 8:30 rolls around, and I like to take a shower before classes, it kind of becomes a problem when two other guys are in the shower with you.

So, I took to taking showers at night, but that wasn't enough due to people coming in and out talking to me every now and then. I'm at the point now that I can't even resort to 3 a.m. showers because of the late hours people in my wing hold. Deodorant can only cover up so much, and when three days roll around I'm sure people notice the stench.

I know that you're a female, but maybe you can ask some of the guys on staff for help for me. So, there is my problem, I either can smell or stick out.

A Guy With A Problem

DEAR GUY,

I'll take the bait — although this looks like another letter from the "Three Amigos."

It sounds like your problem extends beyond the condition several male members of our staff commonly and immaturely refer to as "morning missile" or "night stick."

It seems strange that the hot, rhythmic pulse of steamy water pounding every inch of your flesh would cause you to become aroused. I don't have to tell you that no good can come of this.

I did some boning up on this subject and asked a few male colleagues what they would do if they were in your shower slippers.

One suggested cold showers. I've heard this helps deter erections in some males. Another suggested thinking of baseball statistics or dead kittens while you shower.

I've heard advertisements for a product called "Gold Bond." I'm not sure what it's for or what it does, but you might try it.

If this does not help, you might consider seeking the advice of a doctor or counselor. The problem might be all in your head.

The long and short of it is this, you need to bathe regularly to ensure proper hygiene, but you also need to be able to do it comfortably and without fear or shame.

With proper help, I'm sure you can put these hard times behind you.

A note to dorm director-types: students, male or female, deserve a modicum of bathing privacy. See what you can do to install shower partitions. A note to administrators: if such partitions are installed, they should not be coin operated.

were defeated, however, by a team from Emporia State.

The team of Baisinger and Wall then advanced to the final eight.

After the final eight competition, individual awards were announced. K-State's top four debaters all placed in the top 20, with Baisinger taking third. Baisinger also was named an Academic All-American for the second year in a row. Wall was named to the All-American debate team.

Baisinger and Wall advanced to the final four and onto the championship round.

On their way to the championship, the team defeated teams from Emporia State, San Diego State University, the University of Washington and the University of Missouri in Kansas City.

"Baisinger and Wall did a first-rate job," Wefald said. "They beat competition from fine schools."

Other teams who competed in the final four were Cornell University, Emporia State and Northwestern State University.

"It is very much like an athletic event. We have assistant debate coaches sorting out information at the computers," Burtis said. "They play an important part in our debate tournaments."

Assistant debate coaches for the team are David Filippi, Todd Troutman, Rebecca Opsata, Douglas Hennessee and Martin Horn, all graduates in speech.

Burtis said he thought Susan Stanfield, director of the debate team, was the reason for the team's success.

"It was a great day for the team," Wefald said. "I am proud for the University, debate team, Susan Stanfield, John Burtis and to the team of Jill Baisinger and K.J. Wall."

continue the leadership Jackie McClaskey has shown on that issue.

"We want to continue to work with the city. We understand it is a huge problem. What we want to do is basically be the candidates students will look to, and what we show our initiative on these three issues, they'll look to on the other issues."

He said he would work with the Manhattan City Commission on the problem. He said the students of K-State contribute much to the Manhattan economy, and he said he felt the city of Manhattan could be part of the solution.

Wingert said he would wait for the results of the feasibility study before giving a definite answer to the parking problem or to what role the city commission could play in the solving of it. He did, however, say he felt a shuttle bus from Bramlage would probably be the best way to solve the problem.

Wingert also said a per-credit-hour fee was not appropriate for K-State and that he supported an open admissions policy.

Kansas House passes tuition increase "Representative Glasscock and 11 others chose instead to push it through committee, rather than give it the study it deserves."

REP. SHEILA HOCHHAUSER

WADE SISSON
Collegian

Topeka — The Kansas House of Representatives on Tuesday passed Senate Bill 43, which would raise tuition at K-State by nearly $300 over the next three years and take away $1.2 million in general funds from the Kansas Board of Regents.

Debate in the House was impassioned over Bill 43, but the House ultimately passed the bill, which originated in the Senate, on a roll-call vote.

The regents' proposal to increase out-of-state tuition by 8 percent at K-State, the University of Kansas and Wichita State and 6 percent at Emporia State, Fort Hays State and Pittsburg State passed the House.

The Senate has recommended the regents raise out-of-state tuition by another 2 percent on top of that amount to make up for the lost $1.2 million.

An amendment to restore the $1.2 million proposed by Rep. James Lowther, R-Emporia, failed. Both Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan and Rep. Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan, supported the amendment.

The cuts will take effect in fiscal year 1994.

Some House Democrats said they believe the reduction in regents' funding is part of a backlash against the regents' push for setting admission standards for Kansas high school graduates to get into state universities.

A qualified admissions bill failed on a narrow margin in the House last week, and the regents have supported the proposal. Currently, any graduate of a Kansas high school is guaranteed admission.

Rep. Ed McKechnie, D-Pittsburg, said he thought the Lowther amendment failed because Democrats are unhappy with the regents' support for qualified admissions. McKechnie is against qualified admissions, but supported Lowther's failed amendment.

In other action, the House Appropriations Committee also moved House Bill 2533 out of committee. The bill guarantees a 2-percent increase in funding to the University and a 10-percent tuition increase each semester over the next two years.

The bill will not be kind to K-State, Hochhauser said.

"There are still too many things about this bill that we don't understand," she said. "For instance, what impact will it have on access to the University."

"We had the opportunity to put this thing into a study that would really have looked at the effects," Hochhauser said.

"Representative Glasscock and 11 others chose instead to push it through committee, rather than give it the study it deserves."

Glasscock opposed the motion that the bill be studied.

"It is not in the best interest of the regents institutions to compare how one does compared to another," he said.

Under bill 2533, KU will gain a 5.4-percent increase in peer institution salaries, and K-State will receive 3.1 percent.

Bill 2533 will now go to a conference committee before it is voted on by the House and the Senate.

Hochhauser said she hopes legislators will consider the study when the bill returns to the House for consideration.

Hochhauser said both bills will be negative ones for the University.

"I think they're bad news for K-State," she said. "Senate Bill 43 is a problematic bill. It's not terrible, but it's not wonderful either. House Bill 2533, however, is a real problem."

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

If you thought keeping five pairs of candidates for student body president and vice president straight was difficult, hang onto your hats.

Sid Turakhia, junior in mathematics, and Abdul Ebadi, junior in computer engineering, became the sixth pair of candidates Tuesday to announce their candidacy for the offices of student body president and vice president, respectively.

The pair want to give students more power in saying how their money is spent, Ebadi said.

"We want to give students a say — be able to decide which fees they want to pay and don't want to pay," Turakhia said. "Everything non-academic should be optional."

Fees that Turakhia and Ebadi would like to be optional include the athletic fee, the DB92 fee, the Lafene Health Center fee and Recreational Services fee.

"We don't want to close down Lafene. We want to make it optional. If you use it, you pay for it. We want to give this option to the students," Turakhia said.

The candidates said they were confident most students would choose to pay the fee but felt the option was important.

"They shouldn't be forced to pay for something they're not going to use," Ebadi said.

The pair would also set guidelines for faculty conduct.

"Faculty should be accountable for how they spend their time," Turakhia said. "They should devote 100 percent of their time on students. They should also publish 25 percent of the grade given by the last day to drop classes."

Turakhia said he feels faculty have to devote too much time for research. Students pay 100 percent of faculty salaries, so students should get 100 percent of faculty time, Turakhia said. "This is an educational institution," Turakhia said. "This is Kansas State University, not Kansas State Institution of Research. The primary emphasis should be on education."

However, Charles Reagan, assistant to University President Jon Wefald, said students do not pay 100 percent of faculty

Improved student communication main issue

STEPHANIE FUQUA
Collegian

Improved communication is the main goal of the first political party to announce its platforms on campus.

Alliance for Change, a group of 20 hopeful Student Senate candidates loosely organized to form a party, announced its goals for the upcoming election Tuesday in a press conference. Eleven members of the alliance were in attendance.

Michael Henry, freshman in pre-law and co-chairman of the group, said the party is representative of the University.

Henry said members of Alliance come from all colleges except the College of Veterinary Medicine and the Graduate School. They have older and younger candidates, candidates who live in residence halls, off campus, greeks and non-greeks.

They are interested in communication, multicultural education, fee adjustments and parking.

"Communication is one of the biggest issues the student body is concerned with," Liz Ring, freshman in biology, said. "We have come up with ideas to communicate with student body and also have an ear for their concerns."

Some of those ideas would include having a list of the senators in each college and their office hours in the Collegian, publishing a Student Senate Corner in the Collegian, public forums and publishing the number of the Student Senate Hotline.

There is a history of lack of communications with individual groups such as off-campus, international students, multicultural students and non-traditional students, Dan International Coordinating Council was the main focus of Tuesday night's Student Senate meeting.

The ICC represents 18 different international groups, with 16 of those groups asking for budget allocations.

The African Student Union was allocated $926 for the African Music Extravaganza, which takes place in October, African films and a guest speaker.

Senate passed unanimously an allocation of $621 for a subscription to the Jordan Times and a speaker addressing Arab stereotypes in the media for the Arab Student Association.

Bangladesh Student Association was allocated $301 for Bangladesh National Day and $100 for subscriptions to the Bangladesh Times and Bangladesh Observer.

Chinese Student and Scholar Association was allocated $286 for a mid-autumn festival.

► CANDIDATES FLOCK TO FILE FOR

The K-State campaign trail may have to be widened to a super highway.

Ninety-nine candidates had announced their intention to seek a seat on Student Senate as of Tuesday's 5 p.m. deadline. There are 61 seats available.

They will be joined in the race by eight pairs of candidates who have filed for student body president and vice president.

Nine students are vying for one of six available seats on the Union Governing Board. Only two students had filed for the Board of Student Publications, with four seats available.

Mandatory meetings for all candidates will be April 2 in the K-State Union.

► MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR STUDENT SET

A memorial service for Colin Greene, 21, sophomore in biology, will be Thursday April 1 at St. Michael's Catholic Church in Chapman.

Greene apparently drowned in a boating accident on March 20, two miles south of Abilene.

The family suggests memorials to the Konza Prairie fund, a preserve of the Nature Conservancy. Gifts may be sent to Ackert Hall.

A search continues for his body but has been delayed because of rain and lightning, Lisa Copeland, Dickinson County deputy office secretary, said.

ON THE AGENDA

Students participate in livestock contest

JENNIFER SWANSON
Collegian

For 65 years, cooperative efforts of two animal science clubs have given students from across campus a chance to make new friends and learn something about animals.

Students involved in Block & Bridle and the Dairy Science Club work together each year to produce the Little American Royal, a livestock showmanship contest open to students from any major.

"It's a show where you can get involved, no matter what your major, to show livestock," said Rex Hendrickson, senior in animal sciences and industry and LAR executive committee president. "All the competition is based on showmanship, and it allows students to care for, groom and train an animal and show it in a head-to-head competition with their peers."

Students have the opportunity to show sheep, swine, horses, dairy cattle or beef cattle.

There were about 130 contestants last year, and Hendrickson said he expects 160 or more this year.

Students who have participated in LAR before recommend it to others as a good learning experience.

Brian Dunn, senior in animal sciences and former LAR committee president, said after working with the show for two years he sees it to be a worthwhile experience.

"It can be a real learning experience for someone who hasn't been around livestock or the show ring. It's a good chance to learn something about animals," Dunn said.

John Ringel, senior in animal sciences and industry, has shown sheep at LAR for two years and said he gained a lot of experience because of the competition.

"The committees are good at helping you groom your animals, and it is a good learning experience because you are judged on your ability to groom the animal and not on the animal itself," Ringel said.

LAR also gives students a chance to meet new people.

"Not only does LAR give students an opportunity to learn something about animals, but it also allows you to meet people and professors in animal sciences," Hendrickson said.

The 60-member LAR committee began planning in mid-October for the show, which will take place on April 3, as a part of K-State's Open House.

"A big show like this takes a lot of interaction between students to put on," Hendrickson said. "For everything to go smoothly, it takes a lot of organization."

Sign-up takes place more than a month before the show to give the committee time to assign animals to students and students time to work with the animals, Hendrickson said.

"We always tell people that you get out of the animal what you put into it," Hendrickson said. "The animals aren't real wild, but they aren't puppy-dog tame either."

Two new features have been added to the show this year, Hendrickson said.

The first addition is a team competition in which four to five member teams are judged on how well they show three different species.

Also new to the competition, Hendrickson said, is a rookie scholarship which will be awarded to an individual who has completed only the first semester at K-State.

Activist encourages human rights

ALICIA HALE
Collegian

Jennifer Casolo, a peace activist who was imprisoned by the El Salvador army in 1989, urged a large audience Tuesday to work for peace in the world today by believing in one another and recognizing every person's individual rights.

"I'm here to challenge each and every one of you in small and big ways to resist that which wants to make you cease being a human being and to be a source of nourishment and life for this world," she said in opening to her audience.

Casolo was arrested on charges of harboring weapons when she was in El Salvador as a solidarity worker and held prisoner by Salvadoran security forces for 18 days. Those charges were later found to be false.

She discussed how most Salvadoran people live in poverty.

"This is a country where people really are poor, where people don't know if they're going to be able to feed their children the next day, where lice and fleas are part of everyday existence and where a salary is not necessarily part of everyday existence," Casolo said.

She said when people began to fight against this way of life, the result was war.

"If it's a demonstration, the demonstration is fired upon. If it's a union, the union leader is taken out and assassinated. If it's a peasant organization, in the middle of the night they come and get the people, and they're never seen again," she said.

Casolo also discussed the recent publishing of the United Nations Truth Commission on El Salvador report.

"This is a commission that was prompted by the U.N. to take a look at the human rights atrocities over the last decade or so in El Salvador," Marlene Howell, instructor of women's studies, said.

The report found 85 percent of these atrocities have been committed by the Salvadoran government or its security forces.

"In the '80s, people knew that. Policy makers knew that. But the fear of communism and the fear that El Salvador might have a government that looked after the needs of the majority of Salvadorans first and the needs of countries like the U.S. second was too threatening," she said. "And so the price was human rights. The price was democracy."

She talked about what she believes to be the four pillars of democracy, which included free and fair elections, a justice system that works, civilian control over the military and basic rights such as freedom of speech, freedom of religion, the right to education and the right to health care.

"Democracy in El Salvador throughout the '80s was elections, and they can't even be called free and fair," she said. "But as this war was perpetuated, U.S. dollars continued to pour in because of the need to think that we were saving the world from communism. It was called democracy even though those pillars didn't exist."

Students and faculty showed strong response to Casolo's speech. Many thanked her for sharing her story, and some cried.

Visiting professor to teach geology course

RITA KIDD
Collegian

Robert Weimer, professor emeritus at the Colorado School of Mines in Golden will teach a geology short course April 5-9 at K-State.

The course will consist of four two-hour classroom sessions Monday through Thursday and a field trip to eastern Kansas on Friday. Allen Archer, assistant professor of geology, said.

"This is a great state for studying layered rocks. There are many interesting things that are not marked on a map," Archer said.

Sequence stratigraphy, a new technique in the study of layered rocks, will be emphasized in the course. This technique has revolutionized the understanding of sedimentary rocks, according to course literature.

"Prior to signing up, it would help if a person had a few geology courses. But the course, required for students enrolled in Geology 630, is open to anyone interested in studying layered rocks," Archer said.

Participants will be required to attend the classes and the field trip to the Leavenworth and Tonganoxie areas and write a research paper to receive one hour of credit.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Look who's No. 1

THE ISSUE

For those of you who don't know, K-State has a debate team.

WE SUGGEST

For those of you who don't know, K-State's debate squad just won the national debate championship. Now you know.

With its recent capture of the national debate championship, K-State could be called most quarrelsome school in the nation.

However, we like to think of the title as an honor rather than a vice.

On Monday, for the second time in three years, K-State showed the collegiate arena who was tops in the ancient art of oratorical debate, helping set up the foundation for what could be a dynasty.

While athletically driven sports like football and basketball tend to hold our campus enthralled for the better part of their respective seasons, the inconspicuous debate squad quietly goes about its business of winning tournament after tournament.

We're not advocating that season tickets to debate competitions be sold in the current football/basketball package. We're not saying that the administration should pressure ESPN for television coverage of competitions.

All we want to do is make sure K-Staters realize what academic talent they have inherited.

And so, while "diehard" basketball fans moan and whine about lack of fan support of a quality basketball team that couldn't quite fulfill its goal, no one ever stands up for a debate team that few realize is the best in the nation.

Sink or sink: A dilemma, Pt. III

My last guest column concluded by stating there needs to be ways to grant tenure and promotion for either strong teaching or for strong research and publication; that we ought to do it to bring teaching up to the level of respect that our student customers are paying for; and that increasingly, we will need to do it for competitive reasons.

Market forces outside of academia are beginning to offer college students some very appealing alternatives to class attendance. And soon, universities everywhere are going to be scrambling to prove that their instruction is superior to the competition. That competition will come from distance learning networks and computer-based instruction, both of which do try to be close to the student customer.

The visually dismal but earnest Mind Extension University (MEU) cable network is an example of a distance learning network. The producers of such instructional television programming will eventually graft some entertaining production values onto today's "talking heads" to make the course content more digestible for students whose baseline TV learning experience was Sesame Street.

More important, the computers that are now in the classrooms of elementary and secondary schools will have accustomed tomorrow's college students to non-linear, non-text-based, interactive, visually-intensive modes of discovery and learning — modes that are easier, more fun and less embarrassing than all but the kindest leader of a recitation section. When Heather is one-on-one with an interactive computer-based learning module, she receives affirmation for what she does know and feels free to admit to the machine and to herself what she does not yet know. It is self-paced, user-directed learning, and it is 100-percent guilt-free.

As a result of these new learning-delivery technologies, future undergraduates might spend only two or three years on campus to enroll in courses in the major and in electives not yet available electronically. In other words, on-campus undergraduate enrollments are likely to drop, even as the college-age population grows.

2. Young people will still want to get away from home to try on new personae and invent temporary societies, and a campus and an Aggieville are safe places to do that.

3. The really good teachers who survive the current drought will still draw a crowd for their ability to wrap their charisma around an idea and help it bloom. Just as there are moments of crackling electricity in a live theater show or during a moving church service — when the audience grows hushed and knows that for a few moments they are communicants with a kind of greatness — so, too, the sense of sharing the room with an "intellectual evangelist" will retain a certain appeal and charm for some learners. Teachers like these, who care about ideas, who care about making them accessible and who care about being close to the customer, will someday be counted among the heroes who help to keep the hallways humming in Van Zile and the lights on in Denison.

But that's the near-future. The problem with rewarding publication over teaching is happening now. I'd like to hope that the issue of how to reward college teaching that has been so long debated among academics can this time find a local solution. Scores of good articles have explored the best way to measure and reward effectiveness. We have plenty of fine minds to sift those findings and come up with recommendations. We just need the will to affirm that good teaching matters enough to K-State to spend time developing an equitable and unambiguous way to reward it.

Between now and the day when this and other universities begin to understand the competitive imperative of making good teaching parallel in importance with strong published research, I'd like to offer students the following context from which to view interaction with their arts and sciences professors.

The primary emphasis now being put on publication in the College of Arts and Sciences is a heavy requirement added to the burden of an already overworked faculty. Ever since K-State succeeded in increasing enrollments just as the state legislature reneged on its promised funding formula, it has been "crunch time" for the college's faculty. While our salaries have failed to keep pace with inflation, we have had to endure larger class sections, heavier class loads and less money for instructional equipment and supplies.

Students, when it's "crunch time" for you at the end of the semester, and you have several papers due and tests to study for, what do you do? Well, sometimes you skip classes and appointments to concentrate on what is more immediately important. And that is exactly what every professor should be doing — skipping classes and appointments to crank out the research and publication that are now the sole means to career advancement. So, when a halfway-decent professor walks into the classroom to start teaching, maybe you should applaud. And when you meet that professor during office hours for some advice, maybe you should say thanks because you just think you paid for the class and the consultation time. These days, they're a gift.

KELLY KLAWONN

So there I was at 8 a.m. Almost 30 hours had passed since my last slumber. Had just finished another pack of Camel Lights, which incidentally were bought only a few short hours before. With nearly every nerve ending acting under its own autonomy, I had somehow or another stumbled into Ahearn.

Parched, dehydrated and with a touch of cotton mouth, I saw it — there under the bleachers. The white porcelain casting an innocent shadow on the rubbery floor below.

I am no camel so I headed straight toward it. Wanting — needing — to suck its forbidden fruit, I grabbed the metal handle and gently rotated it forward. Nothing! Not a damn thing. Not even a trickle of rust.

Of all the drinking fountains on this blessed campus, you would think at least the one in the building they have the audacity to call a gymnasium would work.

But noooooooo!! P.E. class is bad enough, much less when you are sleep deprived, caffeinated (I ain't no uncola) and have a head full of nicotine. So I sat through lab — even did some sit-ups and a crazy step test — without so much as a thimblefull of water.

Now I find myself obsessed with drinking fountains. Engaged in a search-and-destroy mission. I am committed to finding the best fountains, as well as those lil pissers we should all stay away from.

Being a poor college student, I have come to appreciate the finer points of water. Put a pitcher of the stuff in the fridge, and it becomes a cool beverage all its own.

Set a glass container full of water with some tea bags on a sunny window sill, and ta-da. You got some tea.

Sometimes, when I'm feeling a bit racy, I squeeze a lemon in it. I'm kind of a free spirit though. That's not something for beginners.

But out of a fountain, our little molecular ménage à trois takes on a whole new feel. No longer is it just water in a glass. Now all of a sudden it becomes this moving stream — or not-so-moving stream — of deception.

Take the drinking fountain by McCain 116. Looks OK. It's one of those new boxy models that looks strangely similar to a dehumidifier my parents once had. But stay away. It is one of those little pissers that barely trickles the water over the stem.

At first I poised myself over the fountain, and for a split second I actually had to wonder whether or not I wanted to deep-throat the faucet. Then visions of the creepy kid with cooties in grade school entered my head. I left disappointed and thirsty.

Or how about the ones that turbo-shoot the stream of water about two feet beyond the fountain. What's that all about? Outside Kedzie 106. Pisser.

Even after the stream consistency problems are fixed, there are always the fountains that spit lukewarm or even hot water. Mmmm good. All of Eisenhower's drinking fountains seem to suffer from this problem.

Another teaser dry-well is the first fountain in Bluemont by the south entrance. Big ol' pisser! Unlike the old relic in Ahearn, these are the new models. Very disappointing.

But by far the best fountain to be found on this here campus is in Kedzie Hall right outside of the Student Publications office. Wow!

Perfect temperature. Not too cold so as to aggravate anyone in need of a root canal. But chilly, nonetheless.

And the flow of the water. Once again, top notch stuff. The right height and always consistent. It's not one of those schizo models that changes heights right in the middle of a swallow.

So after I left my P.E. class, I immediately sauntered over to the Union to buy a really big carbonated beverage. You can never go wrong when dealing with an enormous, non-personal, multi-national corporation. It's those damn natural resources that are such a pain.

BREADBASKET

K-Staters define the word "generosity"

Editor,
Each year, the Mayor's Holiday Food Drive assists the Flint Hills Breadbasket in an attempt to make the holidays more enjoyable for people in need.

This year, K-State was again called on to help fight hunger in the city of Manhattan. This letter is to the entire University community on behalf of the citizens of Manhattan. Thank you. The effort of K-State was absolutely astounding.

In an era when people are often accused of indifference to the plight of others, K-State showed what can be done when people truly care. The city-wide goal for the Mayor's Holiday Tree was to raise 125,000 pounds of food for the Breadbasket.

Thanks to the efforts of hundreds of students, staff and faculty, K-State contributed an incredible 68,000 pounds of the record-setting total of 149,000 pounds of food raised city-wide. Your efforts show once again what a truly valuable member of our community the University is.

On behalf of the hundreds of people who were helped by the Breadbasket this year, our thanks and gratitude.

RESPONSE

No winners in the game of selectivism

Editor,
In regard to John Hart's column in the March 30 Collegian, a great deal of what he says is true. This country has chucked its moral compass overboard and as a result, has lost its way in a storm. I agree that gun control and multicultural education are not the answer. Government coercion never has and never will make people moral. However, judging by Hart's previous columns, he is blind to this very same principle when it comes to the issue of abortion.

I am sick to death of moral selectivism on both sides of the coin. And "liberal" and "conservative" are simply opposite sides of the same counterfeit, elito-fascist coin. Liberals pick our pockets, and conservatives camp under bedroom windows with camcorders, waiting to catch someone in an immoral act. Heads, the state wins, tails, the people lose.

RESPONSE

Columnist obviously resorts to slimy timing

Editor,
This letter is in reference to John Hawks' column in the March 29 Collegian. I am not writing to argue whether or not debaters should be portrayed as "slimy" individuals because of their effective use of rhetoric, but rather I would like to put forth that editorialists are equally guilty because of the way they use the printed word to persuade.

Granted, most editorialists will never argue for a position they do not personally believe in, but the fact still remains that these journalists use persuasive language to try to win others over to their point of view.

It might even be proposed that the writers of editorials are worse than debaters in that respect because their audience is much broader in scope and most likely not fully informed on the subject being written about. This is in direct contrast to the debate world where a specialized jargon is used and nearly all who participate are informed about the topic.

The fact that most lay judges are not privy to the jargon and as deeply informed as to the details of the topic is exactly why debaters dislike them. It would seem odd to ask someone whose specialty is judging beef to referee a lacrosse match, and it is just as odd to expect someone to be a good debate critic when their "specialty" is journalism.

The main reason I think Hawks' column is unsavory is because he chose this particular day to run it. The entire debate squad and all of the coaching staff were in Maryland competing for a national championship and were conveniently unavailable to refute his position. If that isn't slimy, I don't know what is.

REVIEW

Film focuses on infidelity

ANDREW TOMB
Collegian

This week's Kaleidoscope films offering is the Polish film "Knife in the Water," starring Leon Niemczyk, Jolanta Umecka and Zygmunt Malanowicz.

This film marked the debut of Polish director Roman Polanski. Polanski's film deals with the issues of male competition, marital infidelity and yachting. The film is an introspective study of the lives of three characters — a married couple (Andrzej and Christine) and a nameless hitchhiker.

Andrzej invites the hitchhiker along on their weekend sailing cruise, if only to degrade him in front of his youthful wife. He wishes to show himself superior to the stranger as a sailor and as a man.

His plan backfires, however, as Christine has compassion for the poor tramp. She continually criticizes Andrzej in front of their guest, humiliating him. Christine eventually is unfaithful to Andrzej with their "guest," adding to their increasing marital friction.

Viewers may recognize this plot from a recent film "Dead Calm," which is an American remake of "Knife in the Water."

The film is entertaining, and those who fear subtitles will still be able to follow the action, as there is limited dialogue. The action of the film depends much on non-verbal communication between the characters. The nuances of the Polish language translate well into English to add to the viewer's comprehension of the film.

Fans of artistic filmmaking will be appeased by Polanski's "Knife in the Water." The film is shot in black and white on mostly overcast days, adding to the darkness of its subjects' lives. Polanski is a master at shot selection, even at the genesis of his feature-making career, using the limited space of a sailboat and its aquatic surroundings to extremes in a myriad of angles, cuts and shadows.

The performances given in the film are all interesting and challenging. Jolanta Umecka, in the role of the sensual wife, Christine, stood out.

Dance to showcase 4 choreographers

STEPHANIE HOELZEL
Collegian

This year's Spring Dance '93 will be a compilation of the artistic works of four choreographers, dance faculty members Achmed Valk and Luke Kahlich, dance student Suzanne Koucheravy and guest choreographer Maria Ferguson.

Ferguson's dance piece involves the use of improvisation in modern dance. Her piece is an excerpt from her master's thesis concert called "Out of Order — Out of Touch."

The dance demonstrates various aspects of relationships with oneself and others. Each dancer will have a solo as well as perform in a duet.

"I had specific needs for dancers who were good at improvisation. I was very lucky because I found two excellent dancers to dance my piece," Ferguson said.

A series of eight dances accompanied by Joyas Musicales Duo is Valk's choreographic contribution to Spring Dance '93.

The duo is composed of vocalist Angelica Estrada Minton and classical guitarist James Lammers.

"I saw them perform at Union Station last semester and asked if they would be willing to come back for Spring Dance."

They agreed, and they will accompany a series of dances that I have choreographed," said Valk, assistant professor of speech pathology and Spring Dance '93 director.

Tickets are $5 for students and senior citizens, $7 for general public and are available through the McCain Box Office.

The accompaniment for the program will be both live and recorded. Koucheravy, junior in dance, said she believes adding live vocalists brings dimension and an extra interplay to the dance.

"Jennifer Catney will sing 'Amazing Grace' for a part of my piece. I will also use recorded music for part of my piece, which is 'When I Dance I Only See You,'" Koucheravy said.

Twenty-six students, not all of whom are dance majors, will present various dance styles and themes at Spring Dance '93, Valk said.

"We will have jazz, ballet, modern and character dance in the performance. There are also many themes in the pieces involved."

There is a piece with an African flavor, my pieces which are Spanish in nature and then pieces dealing with relationships and the absence of relationships," Valk said.

"All of the dancers have been very good," he said. "We are having a bit of trouble because spring break fell the week before our performance. There is a lot of rushing around and last-minute details to be taken care of, but I think the show will be good."

"We have talented and hard-working dancers, and that has been helpful," Valk said

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

BASEBALL CANCELLATIONS

Both games of the scheduled two-day home stand against Oklahoma, originally slated for 7 p.m. Tuesday and 2 p.m. today, have been canceled due to inclement weather. The Sooners did not make the trip to Manhattan, K-State coach Mike Clark said. Because of Big Eight conference rules, there will be no make-up games.

Investigation reveals that Crews was drunk

Former pitcher had blood alcohol content of 0.14

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ORLANDO, Fla. — Cleveland Indians pitcher Tim Crews was legally drunk when the boat he was driving rammed into a dock, killing Crews and pitcher Steve Olin, and injuring teammate Bob Ojeda, investigators said Tuesday afternoon.

Both Olin and Ojeda were not legally intoxicated, investigators said.

Crews had a blood alcohol content of 0.14, which is beyond the legal limit of 0.10, said Col. Bob Edwards, of the Florida Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission. Edwards said no criminal charges will be filed in the March 22 accident.

Olin's blood alcohol concentration was 0.02 percent, and Ojeda's was 0.006 percent — well under the legal limit, Edwards said. The three had attended a barbecue at Crews' house before going out for a boat ride shortly after dark.

Edwards said the findings had been presented to Lake County State Attorney Brad King, who reviewed them and agreed not to pursue any criminal charges.

Chief investigator Bruce Cooper said none of the witnesses at the barbecue at Crews' home had said he appeared to be intoxicated. Cooper said drinking on boats is permitted, but one cannot operate a boat in Florida while legally intoxicated.

Cooper said Ojeda told investigators the men were fishing on Crews' boat, had made several passes around the lake and were returning to the launch area near Mr. Crews' home to pick up two other fishermen when they struck the dock.

He quoted Ojeda as saying the men had been boating on the lake about 15 minutes when the accident occurred near 7:30 p.m.

Cooper said the investigation turned up evidence that the boat was "planing" or riding high in the water, indicating that the boat was traveling 25 mph or greater. The fishing boat traveled 145 feet after breaking down three of the docks' pilings and three cross braces.

"The exact speed of the boat at the time of the crash is unknown," Edwards said, adding that the maximum speed was impossible to determine from physical evidence.

"The findings of these levels is insignificant compared to the loss suffered by the families of the players," Cleveland Indian spokesman Bob DiBiasio said at the news conference.

He said the club could not take exception to such findings, which, he said, had "some kind of feeling of finality."

The accident occurred on Little Lake Nellie in nearby Clermont on the players' only day off from spring training.

Funeral services were last weekend for Olin, 27, and Crews, 31. Ojeda, 35, is recovering from a scalp laceration that required surgery. He was released from South Lake Memorial Hospital in Clermont on Friday.

The 18-foot Skeeter bass boat owned by Crews — which investigators earlier said was near full-throttle — slammed into the end of a private pier on the small lake. All three occupants suffered head injuries.

Olin died at the scene, and Crews was pronounced dead the following morning at Orlando Regional Medical Center, where he had been airlifted in critical condition. Ojeda was rushed to the Clermont hospital and made a quick recovery.

After a preliminary investigation, wildlife commission probers said Crews was behind the wheel of the boat, which with a 150-horsepower motor can travel at a top speed of 65 mph. Olin was in the middle, and Ojeda on the left-hand side.

Crews, who had recently moved into a large home and ranch on Little Lake Nellie, was an avid fisherman. The players had gathered at his ranch with their families on a day off from spring training in nearby Winter Haven, and the three went fishing at night.

Found on the boat, which suffered little damage, were unopened beer cans in an ice chest, a nearly full bottle of vodka and one empty beer can.

"Obviously, it makes it a classic boating accident that the operator of the vessel was intoxicated," said Jim Ellis, director of the BOAT-U.S. Foundation for Boating Safety in Alexandria, Va. "We find that 30 to 50 percent of all boating fatalities have some alcohol involvement."

"The real shame of it is that he was intoxicated and others weren't," Ellis said. "It was a situation that he should have turned over the operations of the boat to one of the others."

►CAPRIOTTI REPORT FILED

K-State's internal investigation of John Capriotti's allegedly paying athletes — a major NCAA violation — has been completed, Wildcat interim athletic director Jim Epps said Tuesday. Epps said the report was sent to the NCAA Monday afternoon.

"We will wait to hear from the infraction committee," Epps said. "We're in a holding pattern right now."

Capriotti, the former track coach who admitted that he paid several of his athletes, is currently working for Nike in Beaverton, Ore.

Epps said the NCAA office couldn't tell him how long its review of the self-reported investigation would last.

"But they assured me that they would proceed in rapid fashion," Epps said. "They know that we're anxious to wrap this up."

►GOLFERS PLACE 1ST, 3RD

The Wildcat women's golf team fired a two-day total of 673 to win the Southwest Missouri State University Invitational. The men's squad slipped in the final round, shooting a 313 and finishing in third place.

The women shot a 327 in the first round and a 346 in the second at the Highland Springs Country Club in Springfield, Mo.

Valerie Hahn led the women with a two-round score of 159, finishing with a career-best second-place finish in the nine-team field.

The men shot a three-round total of 919. Their third-round score of 313 was the worst of the tournament.

"Basically for the men, it was a disappointing day," Coach Mark Elliott said.

Both Richard Laing and Brett Waldman fired a three-round total of 226, tying them for fifth place.

TENNIS

Netters start Big Eight play with 9-0 rout of hapless MU

Wildcats win all 9 matches without losing a single set

STEVEN ROCK

Collegian

Prior to the Wildcat tennis team's Tuesday afternoon match against Missouri, Coach Steve Bietau said his squad was casting away its 3-9 record and starting anew.

Using that logic, the Wildcats are now a convincing 1-0.

K-State shut out Missouri for the second consecutive season, dominating again this year with a 9-0 drubbing.

"I expected to win the match 9-0," Bietau said. "I would have been disappointed with anything less."

Bietau said the Missouri tennis team is poorly funded and couldn't be considered a true threat.

"They don't get enough money to expect to be competitive in this conference," he said. "Their biggest weapon is that they're not expected to do good, and they never have any pressure on them."

"But that only carries you so far."

The Wildcats won all nine matches in straight sets. On the afternoon, Missouri won a total of just seven games. K-State won 108.

And K-State won four of the nine matches by a 6-0, 6-0 count.

"I don't know that it's fair to count the number of games won," Bietau said. "It wasn't a competitive match at all. There's only so much you can say about it."

"It was a match that we didn't have to play well to win."

Susana Labrador won her No. 1 singles match with a convincing 6-0, 6-0 score, defeating Sonja Moe. Labrador is now 5-8 in the No. 1 singles slot.

Labrador, who teamed up with Amelia Van Der Merwe in No. 1 doubles competition, defeated the Tiger doubles team of Moe and Erica Schwedt by a 6-0, 6-0 count as well.

Senior Suzanne Sim got back on the winning track, posting a 6-0, 6-1 win over Schwedt in the No. 2 singles slot. The win improved her season record to 8-5.

In No. 2 doubles, Sim and Linda Neethling defeated the Tigers' Sheri Heftel and Jenni Lauck, 6-0, 6-0.

Overall in doubles play, Missouri won just one of 37 games.

"We should win," K-State's No. 4 singles player Martine Shrubsole said before the match. Shrubsole responded with a 6-2, 6-1 win against Lauck.

But the three games that Shrubsole lost was the highest number of games that Missouri managed in any single game.

In last season's meeting between the two teams, the Wildcats won the match by the same 9-0 count.

K-State is now 4-9 overall and 1-0 in conference play. The Wildcat tennis team gets back to action on Sunday in Ames, Iowa, to take on the Cyclones and Monday in Lincoln, Neb., to play the Cornhuskers.

The Tigers' overall record fell to 6-5.

COLUMN

The time is right for fishing — if only the fish knew

The weather is here — wish you were biting.

When I was writing this column, the sun was out and spring had sprung. But the fish in the reservoirs of northeast Kansas don't quite know it's spring.

We'll keep trying.

Translate

that into your favorite language, and it means that you may be waiting a while for the fishing to pick up.

If the weather stays like it is, the temperature could rise quickly, and we could be into pre-spawn crappie in a week or two. The fish are probably hanging out in 15-25 feet of water. Those of you with a boat and a graph may be able to find them.

When the shad start moving into the warmer coves and shallows, look for the crappies to follow.

Chris Clouse, a fisheries biologist at Milford Lake, said the fishing is slow but improving.

"Some people are catching catfish on shad sides in the north end," he said. "If the weather stays like it is, I bet the walleye will move onto the dam by next week."

When the walleye move onto the dam, the fishing gets really good — if you know how to do it.

This is an old trick I learned from a wise, old and balding uncle who lives close to Glen Elder Lake.

When the walleye are on the dam, forget the boat. Put on your waders, grab your ultra-light, some four-to-six pound test, a few 16-ounce lead heads and all the chartreuse mister twister bodies you can find.

Although chartreuse is a favorite of mine, you can use any bait you find effective. Jigs, nightcrawlers, minnows and spoons are also effective. I don't recommend minnows because they are difficult to place where you want them. They also tend to swim into the rocks and snag.

Wading on the dam, making sure to stay away from the outlet, walk slowly up and down the dam about waist deep. Any deeper and you may spook the fish lying in shallow water.

The walleye will sit in water that is six to 12 feet deep. Dangle the bait as slow as you can, and use the weight of the jig to feel for holes in the small irregularities of the dam.

It helps to wade for one reason — when you are standing waist deep in the water, you have a lot more control over your bait. Instead of controlling a bait 10 feet down, you're only working about six feet of line. Not only that, you don't have to mess around controlling your boat, again risking scaring the fish.

Some will say that this is just a way for the walleye fishermen to hop on the "finesse fishing" bandwagon. Not true. This method of luring walleye out of their pre-spawn lairs has been around for a lot longer than Guido Hibdon and his finesse tricks.

Also remember that when fishing for walleye, the cooler, cloudy days are best. As their name implies, walleye have huge eyes, which are very sensitive to light. The same sensitivity that enables them to see in deep murky water drives them to deeper water on bright and sunny days.

Clouse also said the smallmouth fishing has been good at Milford.

"Some people have caught some real nice ones. The word has it that the next state record smallmouth will come out of Milford," he said.

Clouse also said a lot of smallmouth being caught were just below the 15-inch length limit.

Hopefully this means a good population of smallmouth will be popping up in the near future. Just remember that smallmouth are a management-intensive sportfish, and catch and release should be practiced diligently.

Good fishing.

▶ WEBSTER UNIVERSITY PROFESSOR COMES TO K-STATE

RITA KIDD
Collegian

Harry James Cargas, professor of literature and language at Webster University in St. Louis, will speak at the eighth annual Parrish Colloquium today.

The colloquium was organized to honor the late Fred Parrish, leader of K-State's history department from 1942-54. The colloquium is by invitation only.

"This is primarily a small-group discussion of a controversial issue," said Robert Linder, professor of history and colloquium coordinator.

Cargas will discuss "Silence as Scandal: The Church and The Holocaust" during this year's colloquium.

One item of argument by Cargas will be the position of the Roman Catholic Church during World War II, Linder said.

"We are carrying on the tradition of the local Conversation Club guided by Parrish," Linder said.

Keeping to this theme, the purpose of the colloquium is to let people present their ideas, then those ideas are discussed and argued. The organizers search for speakers who are informed about controversies, Linder said.

Members of the K-State history department and interested local residents have been issued invitations, which are limited, Linder said.

Atrocious acts prove deadly for Serbs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — A military court convicted two Serbs of war crimes on Tuesday and sentenced them to death by firing squad for atrocities that included slitting the throats of POWs and raping Muslim women.

No date was set for the executions of Borislav Herak, 22, and Sretko Damjanovic, 31.

The commander of U.N. peacekeepers urged Bosnian authorities to turn the case — Bosnia's first war crimes trial — over to an international tribunal to avoid inflaming ethnic passions.

Herak, his head slightly bowed as the sentence was read, confessed to killing 30 war prisoners and civilians, including a dozen young Muslims he first raped.

Damjanovic claims he was tortured into falsely confessing to five murders and two rapes. The only evidence against him, his lawyer said, is Herak's testimony.

Defense lawyers planned an appeal to the Bosnian supreme court, saying the trial produced no hard evidence, and hinged on the disputed confession of one defendant.

Tornado causes costly damages without injuries

WADE SISSON

Collegian

A tornado wreaked havoc along Highway 24 a few miles east of Manhattan Monday night.

East-facing greenhouse walls at Horticultural Services Garden Center, 8460 East Highway 24, were destroyed by what Pottawatomie County Civil Defense Director Harold Etienne identified as a vacuum, caused by the passing tornado.

"My opinion is that it was a real high twister, and there was a vacuum," he said. "A vacuum follows a tornado, first pulling up and then falling down."

Etienne said he thought the vacuum hit the area at about 10:40 p.m. He said he couldn't estimate the cost of the damage.

Rod Hoover, supervisor of the Garden Center, said the most costly loss for the center was the plastic greenhouse walls.

"When I got here the porch was covered with rocks and leaves," he said. "There was a hole in the greenhouse, and whatever went through it did some serious damage to a metal bench."

Fischer Enterprises, a truck bed manufacturing business located just west of the Garden Center, also suffered losses during the storm.

John Fischer, owner of the business, was inside the building as the tornado passed overhead.

"It just sounded like the doors were opening, and it was raining really hard," he said. "I went into the shop, and all the doors blew open, and the windows broke."

The roof of Fischer's building was partially lifted by the tornado and then fell back onto the structure.

The vacuum also caused truck beds to overturn and sent 100-pound blocks of peat moss and other debris flying through the air.

No injuries were reported in the incident. Fischer said he estimates he lost between $2,500 and $3,000 in truck bed damage and another $17,000 or more in structural damages.

"You couldn't see anything," Fischer said. "It just happened so quick. In 35 seconds it was all done."

MARCH 31, 1993

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Mary Zabel, associate professor of special education, answers a question for Dana Sprinkle, senior in elementary education, before a test in her early childhood special education class in Bluemont Hall.

Making Room

F O R O N E M O R E

Being a student at K-State requires a large amount of concentration and hard work. Add a small child to that workload, and many students would be forced to drop out of college.

Not these determined young women.

Dana Sprinkle, senior in elementary education, found out late last summer she was pregnant and has adjusted well to the changes.

She and her husband, Steve, were married a year and a half ago. They had planned to start a family but didn't expect it to happen so soon.

"We are both so happy about the baby, and so are our parents. My dad took care of spreading the word for the first few weeks, and we have been thrown into the excitement since then," she said.

"I was taking a health class during the summer and really started eating healthy then. So when I found out about the pregnancy, I was already watching what I ate."

Sprinkle is taking 12 hours this semester, with six of those being graduate level. She has scheduled her classes at night so her husband can watch the baby while she is at school.

"Steve is so supportive of me, and so is everyone else. My teachers have been great and understand that I may miss a few classes in the next month," she said.

Sprinkle was due yesterday, and she said she hoped to have her baby during spring break.

"It would've been wonderful if the baby had decided to arrive then," she said.

She was scheduled to graduate this semester but said waiting a semester will be worth it. She was also scheduled to do her student teaching this semester, but she said she knew that would be very hard to do since the baby would be coming in the middle of school.

Sprinkle said lately she has been feeling tired but was never sick to her stomach like many pregnant women are. She said she was working two jobs, but she quit them right before her due date.

Financial stress is another thing the couple worries about. Both save money for the expenses ahead. Knowing the sex of the baby helps tremendously, they said.

The couple found out their baby was a boy near the beginning of the pregnancy to relieve some of the financial strain. They said buying things ahead of time is easier when the sex of the baby is known.

Now into her final days, Sprinkle said she tries to concentrate on things as much as she can. It is harder for her now that the baby is moving around constantly.

"Sometimes the baby will get the hiccups for 20 or 30 minutes, and I will sit in class thinking

Dr. Ron Marshall, Manhattan Obstetrician Gynecologist, monitors the baby's heartbeat by using a Doppler Stethoscope and his wristwatch. During her ninth month of pregnancy, Sprinkle had appointments once a week.

In their apartment, Steve Sprinkle, Dana's husband, feels a contraction in her stomach as she experiences false labor.

Convenience store robberies not as common as they seem

KRISTEEN YOUNG
Collegian

Operating late at night is a concern for some 24-hour convenience store managers, but holdups and robberies are a rarity.

Mick Wunder said there has only been one holdup in Manhattan in the three years he has been operations manager for Shop Quik stores.

The incident occurred early in the morning on February 28 at the store located at 430 Fort Riley Blvd.

The man threatened to stab the clerk on duty if he didn't give him the cash drawer from the register. After a struggle, the clerk obeyed the robber and handed over an undisclosed amount of checks and cash.

Police said Lyle Honig, the clerk on duty, then called 911 at 4:29 a.m. to say the store had been robbed.

A Wichita man was arrested in connection with the armed robbery.

Wunder said the incident has been the topic of discussion for Shop Quik store managers. But the topic of employees' safety and store security has always been top priority.

"Everyone was aware of what went on with the robbery. We let the employees know that money isn't important to us. Let them have it," Wunder said.

"Just get them out of there so no one gets hurt, and call the police."

Wunder gives credit to the police for patrolling the store areas. But he said Quik Shop does its own patrolling for safety as well, every day and night.

"The police do a good job of patrolling, and they can't do everything at once."

Riley County Sgt. Stanley Konkright said the police department patrols businesses 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

Wunder said there are many advantages to staying open 24 hours and very few disadvantages.

"It is expensive to shut down every night the lights and heating, and we do most of our cleaning at night to get ready for the morning shifts," Wunder said.

"It is cheaper to stay open than to shut down. It is also convenient for students in Manhattan. Basically a lot of people are out late at night."

Wunder said the disadvantage all businesses have to worry about is theft or robbery. And they keep this in mind when devising security plans for the stores.

Shop Quik takes precautions in many ways against both daytime and nighttime crime, Wunder said.

The store trains all employees to learn security measures of what to do and what not to do in certain situations.

"We tell them to be very attentive as to what is around them. Do things smart and be prepared,"

he said.

Wunder said cashiers also keep little cash in the store late at night.

Konkright advises stores to keep small amounts of cash in the register as well.

"Cutting down the cash on hand is a big safety factor," he said.

"However, robbery is robbery, whether you get $500 or $5,000."

He said punishment would be as harsh for an offender who only got a few dollars as for someone who got away with thousands of dollars.

Other precautionary measures Konkright advised for stores would be to have lighting that allows for high visibility.

"Don't put a lot of things in the windows so officers could see inside when patrolling," he said.

Konkright said late-night crimes such as robbery or a holdup do happen, but not regularly. In fact, shoplifting and unwanted intoxicated people in the store, are more common.

"You can deal with these crimes in the day too. There is no way to say more occur at one time than another," Konkright said.

EMPLOYMENT

Students search for summer jobs

KRISTI HUMSTON
Collegian

With the end of the semester drawing near, students are beginning to search for summer employment.

Toni Herzog, coordinator of Cooperative Education with the Career Planning and Placement Center, said students need to consider their primary job objectives before looking for employment.

Asking yourself why you want to work, how much money you intend to make, what type of experience you'd like to have and where you'd like to be located are some of the objectives to consider.

After determining objectives, Herzog said to begin networking with everyone.

"The hidden job market is where the jobs really are," Herzog said. "Make sure everyone you know knows you want a job."

Herzog suggested looking over the internship and summer bulletin board at the Career Planning and Placement Center and researching those and other companies of interest.

When applying for a job, know about the company you are applying with and be prepared to sell yourself.

"Be the kind of person you would like to employ if you were an employer," Herzog said.

Toni Bowers, service representative with Manpower Temporary Services in Topeka, said it's a good idea to pursue something in the field you are studying so you'll have experience in the long run.

Along with networking and job announcement boards, Bowers suggested using newspapers and temporary help services to find information about employment opportunities.

Bowers said temporary services offer jobs that don't usually require college degrees, allow schedule flexibility and provide an opportunity to get exposure to many businesses.

Factories and offices tend to need summer help, Bowers said, because permanent employees often take vacations during the summer months, and businesses need someone to fill in temporarily.

Bowers said most summer jobs pay between $4.25 and $6 per hour.

"If you want to get in for the money, realize it's just a temporary job," Bowers said. "If money isn't real important, don't hesitate to work for less and get experience and future contacts."

Starting July 1, there will be more summer employment options for individuals between the ages 14 and 21.

Janet Brunton, program director with the Career Assistance Network in Topeka, said the Clinton administration's Summer Youth Employment and Training Program is working to provide more summer jobs for low-income youth who are eligible based on the past six-month's income.

Betty Ball, employment and marketing representative with the Job Training Partnership Act, said students who are eligible for financial aid may also be eligible for the program.

Applications for the program are available at the Job Service's Employment and Training office. Verification of the past six-month's income, a birth certificate, picture identification and your social security card are required when turning in the application.

Eligible individuals are placed with public, non-profit groups for eight weeks and work up to 30 hours per week at minimum wage.

"If a person is handicapped, they are usually automatically eligible," Ball said.

Pregnancy adds stress to student life about it. I can feel it each time he gets a hiccup, so it tends to distract me. Then I realize I should be paying attention, so I try to ignore it. That's pretty hard to do, though."

Just months into it, Susan Bejmovicz, senior in early childhood education, is experiencing the true signs of pregnancy.

Bejmovicz found out she was pregnant in December.

"I knew something was up from the very beginning. I was probably only a couple of weeks along when I started suspecting it," she said.

Bejmovicz said this pregnancy has changed her life drastically. Not only does she worry about getting her homework done, she also worries about making it through class without getting sick.

"I have been so tired and sleepy for the last couple of months, and I never used to be like this. I can barely get out of bed in the morning because my whole body is exhausted," she said.

She started the semester with 13 hours and has dropped to six hours, because of her lack of attendance the first few weeks of class.

"I couldn't get up for my early classes like I used to, and I didn't want my grades to suffer. So I dropped a few classes."

As far as a normal student's appetite, Bejmovicz said, she has changed quite a bit. She now eats much healthier foods including a pint of milk daily and lots of fruit.

"For two months, I couldn't eat pizza or fast food. It made me sick to even think about it," she said.

Due in mid-August, Bejmovicz said she has adjusted to the circumstances pretty well. She said she has a great deal of support from her new husband, Private First Class Russ Bejmovicz.

"We knew from the beginning that we wanted to have it and raise it together. We also knew we would be married someday, we just moved up the date a little," she said.

Both women are anxiously awaiting the birth of their babies and have plans to finish college no matter how long it takes.

Party seeks to improve communication between groups

Lewerenz, freshman in philosophy, said.

Several Alliance members said senators don't communicate with their constituents.

"They are making too many decisions on their own without taking a consensus," Paul Bridges, sophomore in social work, said.

Ring said she agreed.

"I hear people talking about their constituents and wonder if they are voting for what they want or what their constituents want," Ring said.

If elected, the party would like to have the University require a multicultural class to graduate.

"A lot of tensions come from the fact we're not educated about where everybody's from," Henry said.

Members of Alliance for Change would set up committees on budget review and appropriations.

"The University Student Senate has a finance committee, basically collecting fees, and they allocate those fees to organizations on campus with no follow through," Trent LeDoux, freshman in animal sciences and industry, said. "I strongly believe if we have a committee designed for just budgeting and watching out what happens to those dollars, we could save the students a lot of money."

We could also fund programs such as the multicultural class or at least partially fund them."

Lewerenz said there's no way to see how the money is being spent.

"Senate just rejected a measure that would for the first time in history lower the fees. There's never any review of the fees. They just keep going up and up," Lewerenz said.

Senate doesn't have to raise fees to offer new programs and new ideas, LeDoux said.

"It's simply budgeting and redirecting funds that are already there," LeDoux said.

All candidates have been talking about parking, Henry said.

"As for the parking situation, a shuttle system is great, but we need to look at terms of long-term goals," Henry said.

One such goal would be the construction of a parking garage. The group would consider making the thing a contest for architectural engineering students.

"Capital improvements are always easiest to sell," LeDoux said. "This is something everybody can use."

Incorporating the Student Governing Association is another goal of the group, Henry said.

"It would free up our money from the state and in the long run be making money for students," Henry said.

Organizing parties will help the political process.

"Our goal isn't to make it more political, but to make it more organized," Thompson said.

However, the members said they don't think parties will increase animosity between candidates.

"The way Senate set up the guidelines for parties, it's difficult to campaign politically. We got together because we have similar ideas," Lewerenz said.

If this description fits you, you're eligible to apply for a Summer and/or Fall 1993 staff position. Applications and job descriptions for Student Publications positions are available from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. in Kedzie 103 (east of the Union).

Positions:

- Royal Purple Editor-in-chief
 - Collegian Editor-in-chief
 - Collegian advertising manager
- (Application deadline for these positions is at 5 p.m. Friday, April 2. Interviews will be the week of April 5-9.)

- Desk editors
- Advertising representatives
- Graphic artists
- Columnists
- Staff writers
- Photographers
- Copy editors
- And more

(Application deadline for these positions is at 5 p.m. Friday, April 9. Sign-up sheets for interviews will be in Kedzie 103 after editors and managers are hired.)

This is a great opportunity to get involved on campus while having fun, building a resume and gaining hands-on experience.

Senate approves allocations for international associations an allocation of $576 for a speaker. Passed unanimously were three projects for the India Students Association. These projects included a cultural activity, scheduled for October, India's Music and Dance and Indian films. International Club received $120 for information tables. Iranian Student Association was allocated $45 for a subscription to the Iran Times.

Japanese Student Association was allocated $169 for a subscription to Japan Quarterly and a showing of a film.

Passed unanimously was an allocation of $170 for the Korean Student Association for a film festival, planned for October.

Vietnamese Student Association was funded $671 for the Full Moon Festival.

Senate also addressed allocations for other groups in Tuesday's meeting.

Amateur Radio Club, a group that promotes the hobby of amateur radio communication, received an allocation of $48.30 for an alumni newsletter and postage for QSL cards.

Young Democrats received $750 for a membership drive, a political awareness week and a political awareness drive.

Circle K International, a community service organization, received $818.90 for an international convention and an international service week.

Voices for Choice, a non-partisan organization dedicated to educating the University community about medical, political and religious aspects of the reproductive rights movement, received $247.80 for information tables and educational films and an honorarium speaker.

Senate also allocated $1,054.50 to Students Acting to Save a Vulnerable Environment, which promotes environmental issues and education.

The allocation was for an environmental jeopardy speaker, alternative transportation week and a speaker on wetland prevention.

salaries. Only 28 percent of faculty salaries come from student tuition. The other 72 percent come from state appropriations, federal research grants and experiment station and extension funding.

Turakhia said he would also like to address residence hall issues. He said he felt signing a contract for one whole year was unreasonable.

"We need to cut that down and do it semester by semester," Turakhia said.

Residence hall rooms are also too small, Turakhia said.

"Animals in a zoo, prisoners in a jail have more room than those people do in their rooms," he said.

"We need to give people the most amount of room they can get and get better living conditions."

Turakhia said he believed people should be given more room when the residence halls are not full.

As for parking, Ebadi said they are open to ideas and suggestions.

"We could have the shuttle system — use the parking lot next to Bramlage," Ebadi said.

"Or we could tear down East Stadium and build a multi-level parking garage," Turakhia said.

Turakhia said he would work for an equal and proportional distribution of sports money for female sports and activities. He said women should be able to use the money they spend, instead of subsidizing male sports.

"We need to get a consensus on how they want their money spent. If they want to spend on men's basketball, that is their right, but they shouldn't be forced to," Turakhia said.

The candidates also said they would work to reduce or eliminate exorbitant expenditures of student money and instead improve the quality of education and reduce fees. Something that would fall under the quality of exorbitant expenditures was the renovation of the Student Governing Association office, they said.

"If you go into the SGA office, it's all shiny, it looks polished," Turakhia said. "Everything doesn't have to be shiny. We want to do it at the least possible cost."

ESSENTIALS

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Bored weirdo should just go out and buy a television

DEAR CASSANDRA,

My daughter has a problem with nasal excretion. She flicks boogies on unsuspecting passersby. This embarrassing habit has left my wife and me in utter disdain. We have tried to ignore the viscous globules propelling from her index fingers. She has really perfected her aim. Should we seek professional counseling?

Concerned Parent

DEAR BORED WEIRDO,

Your letter snot funny. You desperately need to purchase a television — you have entirely too much free time on your hands.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

Could you please settle a dispute between my roommate and me? Now that Clinton is in office, he says he is going to make good on his campaign promise to let homosexuals join the military. At first, I didn't think this was a good idea, but after further thought I decided that indeed Clinton's push to let them join might not be such a bad idea if he only gave them limited duties.

I explained to my roommate how we could have used homosexuals in the Army during the Persian Gulf War, but he didn't agree with me. I said we could have used unarmed homosexuals to sweep for mines in the desert by having them hold hands to form a long chain and walk in front of jeeps, tanks etc. My roommate, however, doesn't see things the way I do. He says that we should at least give them guns. Could you please settle this dispute, as we haven't spoken for days.

Worried Roommate

DEAR JERK,

Your letter is proof to me that we have major failings in our educational system. It is remarkable that a person so narrow minded as you has made it this far.

Your letter is not funny or clever. It is lame.

I ran your letter to show that simple-minded bigots can exist and even thrive at an institution of higher learning.

I won't even address your arguments. As a friend of mine is fond of saying, "When you argue with a fool, then there are two."

One-armed bandits bet to win

LEFT: Sean Wissman ties an arm of his brother, Scott Wissman, senior in pre-medicine, behind his back Thursday afternoon. STEPHANIE FUQUA Collegian Sickly fluorescent light reflected off the burnt umber cafeteria seats and the ICBE™ machine in the corner. Older people sipped their coffee and mostly ignored the goings on.

The candidates settled themselves in their seats and introduced themselves.

"Hi, I'm Scott — Scott Wissman, that is."

"And I'm Scott Truhlar — call me Scott."

Truhlar and Wissman, both seniors in pre-med, picked the Wal-Mart cafeteria to announce their candidacy for student body president and vice president, respectively.

The two, wearing K-State sweatshirts, settled into the plastic seats and explained why they decided to run.

"Right now, we see President Wefald as a university president who is extremely supportive and concerned with what students are thinking about and want," Truhlar said. "Because of that it makes a very good atmosphere for somebody coming into student government."

"Number two, Jackie McClaskey has done one of the best jobs, in fact the best job of any student body president in the nearly four years I've been here. That also lends itself for someone to come in and work well in the system," Truhlar said.

"Because of this situation, Scott and I feel that not only will this job be relatively easy to do, but..." he paused.

"We could do it with one arm tied behind our back," Truhlar and Debates give candidates opportunity to present platforms, answer questions

Goodnow Hall sponsors student question period

RHONDA WILSON Collegian

It didn't take long for the campaign for student body president to get underway.

Just one day after the official filing deadline, five of the eight presidential candidates met on the third floor of Goodnow Hall to debate current issues facing K-State students and the University.

The debate was sponsored by Rachel Smith, junior in English, as a floor program to educate residents of Goodnow.

Tracy Mader, Charles

Walters, Ed Skoog, Sid Turakhia and Fred Wingert took turns answering questions about their plans if elected as student body president.

Each of the candidates present began the debate with introductions of themselves and their campaign platforms.

Tracy Mader, junior in agricultural economics, is supporting a co-curriculum transcript for the University, as well as electronic resumes and a student database.

Charles Walters, junior in political science, history and international studies, is in favor of giving students more direct influence on the University.

"We need to make the University accountable to the students," he said.

Ed Skoog, senior in English, said the Student Governing Association is a simulation of a government right now because all of the monetary decisions are approved elsewhere.

His platform focuses on using strong leadership to get student government in a position to be able to make more decisions.

Sid Turakhia, junior in mathematics, said his main goal is to empower the students. He referred often to the idea of letting the students decide which student fees they will pay in conjunction with their tuition.

Finally, Fred Wingert, junior in business administration, said he plans to use teamwork to implement his plans for K-State. One of his main goals is to reform the textbook buy-back procedures of the K-State Union.

The first question the candidates answered concerned the increase in tuition.

Most of the candidates said they agreed students need to voice their opinions to their state legislatures.

"What is it you say? The wheel that squeaks the loudest always gets the grease," Turakhia said. "You need to squeak."

Mader said the cost of tuition will be the biggest issue for the Kansas Legislature for the next three years. He supports a cap on the cost-fee ratio.

The second question asked the candidates about their support or opposition to the possible incorporation of SGA.

Incorporation of SGA would allow student government to retain the interest on student fees held in reserve. Currently this money, about $50,000 a year, goes into the state budget.

All of the candidates in attendance said they would encourage the incorporation of SGA.

Mader, though, had some reservations about supporting the idea without knowing all the facts.

"Being a part of the state offers protection and benefits,"

Vice presidential hopefuls participate in first forum

BRYAN LARSON Collegian

History was made last night.

For the first time in the existence of K-State, a vice presidential debate took place.

Never before has there been an office of vice president. After the creation of the office by Student Senate, a debate was deemed necessary.

Six of the eight vice-presidential candidates participated in the forum Wednesday night in Goodnow Hall. More than 30 people were in attendance to listen to the debate, which lasted nearly an hour.

Candidates introduced themselves, stated their goals and answered questions from a moderator.

Mark Scarborough, senior in electrical engineering and pre-medicine, began by stating that he and his presidential candidate, Tracy Mader, would like to improve upon the marketing of K-State students. Mader is a sophomore in agricultural economics.

"At the present time, on-campus interviewing is decreasing, and this makes it more difficult for all students to find employment after graduation. We need to be more aggressive in the marketing of students," Scarborough said.

Ian Bautista, senior in political science, Spanish, Latin American Studies and pre-law, was the next to speak. His running mate is Charles Walters, junior in pre-law.

"Our candidacy can be described with four words," Bautista said. "Those words are planning, guidance, communication and responsiveness."

"The main goals of Charles and I would be to set up a book cooperative, work on residence hall reform and to improve the parking situation."

Bautista said he feels the person who fills the office of vice president should be more than a second president.

"Instead of being a second president, the vice president should be more of a foot soldier and an adviser."

Eric Henry, graduate student in journalism and mass communications, said he feels both he and his running mate are able to cut through the clutter and see the big picture. His running mate is Ed Skoog, senior in English.

"Ed and I are very alike in that we both care very deeply for K-State. I know that is cliché, and I hoped I would never say that in this campaign, but it is very true," Henry said. "Though we may come across as a bit goofy, we both feel very strongly about certain issues, and we both care

'Chronister Plan' would allow universities to keep more of tuition

K-State has a great stake in a bill that would change the way it and other Kansas Board of Regents universities receive funding.

House Bill 2533, known as the "Chronister Plan," will allow institutions to keep 80 percent of all tuition increases they implement.

The remaining 20 percent goes to the regents for allocation, Bob Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, said.

"Essentially, the plan will lock in 2 percent of the state general fund increase to the Board of Regents institutions over the next three years," Krause said.

"I still think it is a little problematic. I think because of the differences in institutions, it should be studied."

Krause said he hoped the bill would be placed in an interim committee to be studied further.

"On one hand, it is positive, but I think it needs study before it moves on," Krause said.

Regarding House Bill 2533, Provost James Coffman said he also wanted the bill to be studied before it goes any further.

"That bill has some innovative concepts that should be looked into," he said. "It has lots of positive details. It's just that the figures as they are won't work for K-State."

"We're hoping the Legislature will hold it until next year for an interim study of the bill."

Krause said this bill is not acceptable because the Cooperative Extension Service and the Agricultural Experimentation

► COMMUNITY TO SEE AFRICAN CULTURE

SYLVESTER CHRISTIE Collegian

Manhattan will be treated to an evening of African culture from 6:30 to 11:30 p.m. on April 3 at Manhattan Middle School.

The event, dubbed African Night '93, will feature African music, dance, drumming and singing, and a fashion show with food from different parts of the continent served before the entertainment.

"It's a chance for African students to share their culture with the Manhattan community, so they can see what Africa offers," said Elizabeth Uriyo, graduate student in grain science and secretary of the African Student Union.

Uriyo said she is encouraging students to attend the event as this could be a starting point to learn about Africa.

Senior in finance starts on Wall Street

SYLVESTER CHRISTIE

Collegian

A K-State student has received a job on Wall Street with a leading financial institution.

Paul Burns, senior in finance, said he was always longing for the opportunity to work in the financial sector, to build a foundation and acquire analytical skills in the investment arena.

Burns will be starting his new job in August with Salmon Brothers, a reputable investment bank on Wall Street.

He said his position will be as financial analyst with responsibilities for analyzing financial statements.

New York City is probably the best of the best and the worst of the worst, but Wall Street is the best place for him to start a career in finance, he said.

New York City has a demanding lifestyle, but his aim is to use the exposure to meet different people in the financial world because this is important to his professional growth, he said.

"It's kind of the pulse of the business world because that is where all the major investment banks are located," Burns said.

Bradley Brenneman, senior in accounting and a friend of Burns, said New York City has a lot of entertainment that can be distracting to young people, but Burns is a focused person with definite goals.

Burns said he got the job through knowing the father of a K-State graduate who now works on Wall Street.

The former K-State student gave him guidance and advice as to how to job hunt on Wall Street, he said.

Burns said his advice to students graduating from K-State is to build contacts with people while in college.

"I started the summer of my sophomore year to build contacts," he said.

Although contacts may not get anyone a job, it can help to secure an interview from which you can receive further references to openings elsewhere, he said.

"Even highly qualified people are finding it difficult to get a job by sending out a resume these days. The job market is tight," he said.

Burns plans to work for two years, return to one of the top five universities to pursue an advanced degree and then return to a career in the financial sector, he said.

"This is a great opportunity, which says a lot about Paul's character. He is clearly an overachiever," Brenneman said.

The Department of Finance should feel very fortunate to have a student like Burns graduating from it, Brenneman said.

Burns said he is confident his academic background from K-State and his interaction with its international community will prepare him to function efficiently on the job and to adapt to the different cultures of New York.

He said he will miss his family, but he will be fine because they are supportive in seeing his dream come true.

At 5:02 p.m., Jessica Kincaid, 3000 Tuttle Creek Blvd., Lot 434, and in Ho Kim, 1119 Pioneer Lane, No. 329, were involved in a non-injury accident in Lot A-24. Damage to both vehicles was less than $500.

RILEY COUNTY POLICE

These reports are taken directly from the daily log of the Riley County Police Department. Because of space constraints, not all crimes appearing in the log are published.

TUESDAY, MARCH 30

At 7:45 p.m., Douglas Girard, 113 S. Fourth St., Clay Center, and Brian Bourgeois, Moore 240, were involved in an injury accident at 12th Street and Bluemont Avenue. Girard and his passenger, Charles Burnett, 413 Kearney St., were transported to the Saint Mary Hospital for treatment of injuries.

CORRECTION

In the March 19 Collegian, a front page photo caption misidentified a swimmer as Michael Murphy, 12, Manhattan. The swimmer was Jonathan Spikes, 12, son of Frank Spikes, professor of adult and continuing education. His friend was Michael Murphy.

The Collegian regrets the error.

Your Q. & A. About Student Financial Assistance

Q: Where is the Financial Aid Office located?

A: The office of Student Financial Assistance is located in Fairchild 104 and is handicap accessible by using the east ground floor entrance and elevators.

Q: How do I apply for Financial Aid at K-State?

A: You may pick up the free application for Federal Student Aid at Fairchild 104 between 9:00 a.m. and 4:45 p.m. (Yes, the office is open through the noon hour.) If you can't make it to our office during business hours, you may pick up a financial application outside our door at any time.

Q: Whom can I talk to if I have questions about the Financial Aid process?

A: The Financial Aid office is giving you the perfect opportunity to visit with someone—in person—during their open house April 5th through April 9th. Our entire office is looking forward to visiting with the students at K-State. We invite students to drop by and get acquainted.

Q: What happens during "Open House"?

A: The professional staff—including directors—will be available to answer your questions. Feel free to ask about the forms, application process, or any of the Federal Aid programs.

Q: Where do I leave my financial aid paperwork? Do you have a drop box?

A: Our office has two drop boxes. One is located outdoors by the parking meters in front of Fairchild Hall. The second drop box is located indoors near our office entrance at Fairchild 104 and is handicap accessible. Of course, you may always mail your paperwork or leave it with one of our reception area staff.

NICOLLE FOLSOM

Collegian

As Becky Fitzgerald, assistant lifestyles editor of the Salina Journal, began working on a feature package about the marriage ceremony of Salina residents Steven Durant and Skip Bishop, she assumed there would be backlash, she said.

"I knew there would be negative reaction," Fitzgerald said.

The reason: Durant and Bishop are homosexuals.

Fitzgerald, a 1985 K-State alumna, gave a presentation in conjunction with Freedom of Information Month about how and why she wrote the controversial feature and how the Journal dealt with community responses.

The A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications and the professional and student chapters of Women in Communications Inc. sponsored the forum at 7:30 p.m. Monday in the K-State Union Cottonwood Room.

Fitzgerald told the audience of 45 that a year ago, she had noticed more alternative lifestyle events showing up on the calendar, and had since been kicking around the idea of a homosexual story.

When the homosexual couple came to the Journal before Christmas and requested their engagement picture be put in the paper, it seemed like the right time to do the story, she said.

"All these questions popped into our heads," she said. "It's real uncharted territory for Salina."

After several meetings and the go-ahead from the editor, Fitzgerald began conducting interviews.

Before she was done, Fitzgerald had interviewed the couple, the reverend who performed the ceremony, a reverend who wouldn't have done the ceremony, a lawyer, a counselor and the family of the gay man who were struggling to deal with his revelation, she said.

The feature package containing four separate stories ran on Jan. 24.

"We were all in quite an uproar for two weeks," Fitzgerald said.

Because of the story, the Journal lost 112 subscriptions, most of which have since been renewed, she said. The paper also received 67 letters to the editor, the majority of which were negative.

Two churches dropped their advertising, and the manager of a local Christian radio station urged listeners to drop their subscriptions, Fitzgerald said.

Durant and Bishop have received good and bad responses, she said. The couple has received letters of encouragement from across the United States.

On the flip-side, there has been a barrage of rumors concerning marital spats. The restaurant where Durant works has received terrible word-of-mouth publicity, Fitzgerald said.

Fitzgerald said she didn't take a lot of flack because most of it was targeted at the editor.

However, there were a few readers who questioned her own sexuality.

"People were calling in and asking if I was a lesbian," she said.

Fitzgerald describes herself as conservative, and said she must have done her job correctly because readers did not perceive her conservative views in the feature.

"I do not have a problem with same-sex marriages," Fitzgerald said. "I feel my life has been enriched by knowing Skip and Steve."

However, she flip-flops when it comes to her religious views because of her upbringing, she said.

She said it is not her place to tell them they are sinning.

"I'm not their judge," she said. Jennifer Polcyn, freshman in elementary education, isn't quite sure how she feels about the issue.

"I have mixed feelings," she said. "I think people have to be open-minded about different situations in our society, and that's what I try to do."

Regents' vacancy still in opposition

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Gov. Joan Finney's second appointment to fill a vacancy on the Kansas Board of Regents appears to be in trouble in the Senate.

Lawmakers said Wednesday that opposition to former Sen. Jack Steineger's appointment is strong enough in the chamber where he served for 28 years to block his confirmation to the board, which oversees state universities. Steineger is a Kansas City, Kan., Democrat.

Opponents, both Democratic and Republican, focus on what they say has been Steineger's lack of support for higher education while he served in the Senate.

However, Senate Minority Leader Jerry Karr, D-Emporia, said regents appointments have become a political football.

"I don't think it's good in the long run for the regents," Karr said. "I'm afraid we're not looking at the ability of the person to do the job."

He emphasized that Steineger, a 68-year-old retired attorney, is qualified for the job.

"I don't think that there's any question that he's capable," Karr said.

The Senate will vote Thursday on Steineger's confirmation.

Finney asked Steineger to serve on the regents after her first appointment, Ruth Schrum of Manhattan, was withdrawn because of opposition in the Senate.

Steineger said Wednesday he believes he has 17 or 18 votes, just a few shy of the 21 needed. Others said he has only 14 votes.

"It's disappointing to be treated by former colleagues in this fashion," Steineger said at the Statehouse, where he spent Tuesday and Wednesday lobbying on his own behalf.

He said he would not withdraw his name from consideration, and Finney agreed to continue pressing for confirmation.

Steineger served in the Senate in 1965-1993, and was minority leader for 12 years. He was Wyandotte County juvenile court judge for a time, and spent several years overseas with the U.S. State Department, serving in embassies in West Germany and Iraq.

"His lack of interest and support of regents through the years concern senators," said Senate Majority Leader Sheila Frahm, R-Colby.

Frahm, who served on the State Board of Education, said she wants Finney to appoint someone who is committed to higher education.

Democrats opposed to his nomination cite the same reasons.

"The votes aren't there," said Sen. Paul Feleciano, D-Wichita.

"He never supported any kind of an increase on taxes which would support not only K-12 (kindergarten through 12th grade) but higher education. Jack was never there. To me, it's wrong."

Sen. Doug Walker, D-Osawatomie, who supports Steineger, said his political past has come back to haunt him.

"The old timers are the ones voting against him," Walker said. "It's the old timers who served with Steineger and didn't like some of the things he did."

Steineger said he has spoken with all the new members of the Senate, 21 in all, since Finney appointed him earlier this month.

"They seem very friendly," he said. "You just have the feeling someone has been poisoning the well. It kind of seems like the Senate is demanding prior approval of the governor's appointees, which is not the way it's supposed to work."

THE ISSUE

The EPA is charging companies for the right to pollute.

WE SUGGEST

The agency must realize they are selling off our environmental future.

Add one more thing to the auction block — pollution.

For a mere $11.5-million bid at a recent pollution auction at the Chicago Board of Trade, Carolina Power & Light Co. bought the right to emit more than 85,000 tons of sulfur dioxide into the atmosphere.

The Environmental Protection Agency started this program in hopes of creating "a free-market path to cleaner air."

The basis of this program is utility companies that reduce their sulfur dioxide emissions can sell off their pollution "rights" to other companies.

Sulfur dioxide, produced from the burning of coal, is the main element in acid rain.

Each permit bought allows a company to discharge one ton of sulfur dioxide per year beginning in either 1995, when the clean-air programs begin, or the year 2000, when tougher programs take effect.

With the permits it bought, Carolina Power & Light Co. can wait until 2005 to install anti-pollution equipment, or "scrubbers."

The hungriest buyers were utility companies that gobbled up 95 percent of the offerings. The utilities, however, can't use the permits to break existing clean-air standards.

To buy the pollution "rights" of others only puts off the inevitable job of cleaning up of one's own act.

There is a slight incentive to clean up and sell your "rights", but the biggest savings are in buying the "rights."

In the Carolina Power & Light Co. case, how much damage can be done in the five years they bought? The EPA is only digging a deeper hole for our environment.

MAN'S BEST FRIEND?

BRAD SEABOURN

Like every warm, loving, compassionate, STUPID human being, I am the owner of a dog. Co-owner actually, but I believe I am entitled to slightly more ownership than the rest of my family because I have had the distinction of bailing our family hound out of what my kids call "dog jail." All that is required for this honor is to pay a small fine that includes room and board and could very nearly feed a family of four for a week.

(In other words, his shaggy butt is mine.)

I say stupid because I am presently irritated at our jailbird (who we will call Keeshan for lack of a better word and because that is actually his name), due to the fact that he is, AS I WRITE THIS, exercising one of three canine skills — barking. All dogs are required to master these skills before they can be properly kicked and yelled at.

Just in case you are wondering, the other two dog skills are eating and defecating, of which the latter will henceforth be referred to using the more common term — "pooping," so children everywhere will be able to follow along.

I recently read where a group of scientists spent lots of money and many years trying to figure out why dogs bark, and concluded that the domestic canine barks for absolutely no reason whatsoever. Although it would have denied these brilliant researchers a few publications (seen in grocery stores everywhere) and instant worldwide notoriety, I could have saved them all that trouble if they had simply asked me or had spent a few minutes observing our dog, Keeshan.

Keeshan is truly a canine master. He can artfully perform all three dog skills within the span of three minutes: he EATS his food, trots across the yard and POOPS, and then turns around and BARKS at it. All within two minutes and thirty-eight seconds flat the last time I timed it.

As a matter of fact, Keeshan is the basis for a book I am currently writing about dogs titled, "Everything You Wanted to Know About Dogs After You Have Stepped In It," which has an entire chapter devoted to barking (there are, of course, chapters appropriately devoted to eating and pooping). The chapter on barking is, however, a short chapter (only one page), but then so is my patience on the subject.

The sum and substance of barking (and you can read this in my new book) is that dogs bark for NO reason and ANY reason. Keeshan barks at cars, other dogs, cats, and strangers, which are standard fare for any dog worth his (or her) meal of ground mustard in a can. But he also barks at grass, toys, spiders, apples, rocks, ants, leaves, worms, barbecue grills, house flies, sticks, houses, airplanes and helicopters, manure, trees, birds, butterflies, and my favorite — DIRT. And then last, but not least, squirrel flatulence.

That's right — squirrel flatulence.

It has obviously been difficult to prove, but after years of arduous research, all my laboratory indications show that although squirrel flatulence as a definable substance is EXTREMELY difficult to isolate (Do you know how many squirrels it takes to get just one ounce of flatulence?), there HAVE been squirrels in the vicinity when Keeshan has gone absolutely barking ballistic, and I can think of no other reason except for squirrel flatulence as to why he should do that. However, of this much I am absolutely certain: if he even SUSPECTED there were squirrel flatulence anywhere in the area, he WOULD bark at it.

Truthfully, I think if I suspected squirrel flatulence nearby, I would bark at it too, which might very well explain the strange behavior of some college students I recently observed in Aggieville late one evening.

Keeshan is an exceptional dog. So, I am sure somewhere, in that gnat-sized brain of his, there is ample canine justification for each and every bark. Squirrel flatulence I can understand, but I just wish I knew why he barks at dirt.

I am not sure who I was when I was seven years old. Many of the rest of my years signal a significant period. For instance:

Age 24: Old Fart Stage.
Age 23: Vote for Ross Perot Stage.
Age 21: Damn Long-haired Hippie Stage.
Age 19: Vote for Michael Dukakis stage.
Age 18: Attending College Stage (Also known as the Flunking Out of College Stage.)
Age 16: Drag Racing in Hot Rods Stage.
Age 12: What's Under That Skirt? Stage.
Age 2: Fun with Poop Stage.
Age seven is missing, as are several others. But I do know this: I loved Maureen McCormick at age seven. At age seven, I loved Marcia Brady.

Syndication meant nothing to me when I was a kid.

It did not occur to me that the Brady Bunch was actually a nightly series on the ABC network and later shown via syndication on one of the three channels our television in Alta Vista (pop. 453) received prior to the advent of cable.

I did not really grasp the strangeness of Marcia being seven years old one week and in college the next.

The literary concepts of allusion and metaphor also eluded my tender mind at age seven. I never noticed the marooned travelers of Gilligan's Island could easily be seen as representing the Seven Deadly Sins: Gilligan (Sloth). The Skipper (Gluttony). Mr. Howell (Avarice). Mrs. Howell (Vanity). Ginger (Lust). The Professor (Pride). Mary Ann (Envy).

Sex was another thing. At age seven, what the hell is sex aside from a dirty magazine snuck into school under a coat, cats screeching in the night, a dog hugging your brother's leg real friendly-like? About the only thing I knew about men and women is that men peed standing up, much to the chagrin of women who never talked on summer afternoons about playing centerfield for the Boston Red Sox.

The things I know now. I had no clue then that men and women did anything together like ... that one thing. I guess I still have some unresolved problems with it.

So, in essence, I never thought of making love to Marcia Brady. When I saw her on the television there was just the feeling in the heart that tugged, that smiled, that glazed over my eyes.

During some late nights, my friends have laughed at me as I have told them of my crush on the eldest Brady sister. Well, okay, they laugh at the next part.

See, one night after thinking about marrying Marcia Brady/Maureen McCormick, I had a dream.

In the dream, she and I were on a date. I was driving my mom and dad's blue Gran Torino station wagon (at seven, mind you). Marcia and I were in front of the drugstore in downtown Alta Vista.

Then she started laughing. So did my family. So did my friends. So did the rest of the Bradys. Everyone snickered. Mom and Dad. Corey, Robbie, Cardinal, Ewack. The Bradys. Sam the Butcher.

And there was Marcia, looking at me in my dream, laughing like she did in the episode where Cousin Oliver starts the big pie fight on the movie lot.

Then I heard why. I guess the polite word is flatulence, and Marcia was having plenty of it. From that point on, the romance kind of left our relationship.

So, I guess in retrospect age seven was the In Love with Marcia Brady Stage. Then came age eight. And nine. And ten. And on and on, never to find a home in syndication. Hell, none of us are young forever.

What debating rules are all about

Editor,

I am writing this in response to John Hawks' March 29 "debater bashing" column.

John, John, John. Shame on you, attacking all those debaters when they weren't even around to defend themselves. So, I take up the gauntlet on behalf of the KSU debate squad.

Now, the basic gist of your article (as I see it) is that you don't like debaters because they're two-faced, conniving, hypocritical bastards, and you used the example of the squirrel case. First of all, please realize that using that example is like using "Trees" (I think that I shall never see/A poem as lovely as a tree;) as an example of good poetry. I agree, that wasn't a serious case, it was made to win debates but that's not what debate's about.

Remember, the Affirmative team is supposed to analyze a proposed problem and give what they believe to be the best solution, and the Negative team is supposed to defend the status quo, or simply show that the Affirmative's case isn't a good idea. An Affirmative team chose that squirrel case, they didn't get stuck with it on a coin toss. Most Affirmative teams use their research, problem-solving skills and common sense to develop a sound, workable, advantageous case. True, some abuse the activity, but then they're not playing by the rules, and unless they're really good, don't win very often.

When on the Negative side, you may not believe the status quo is the best option, but most of the time you certainly won't believe that the Affirmative's case is either. So, you concentrate on using your problem-solving skills and common sense, and superior cognitive ability to attack their case.

This is how debate is supposed to work, and it is corrupted from time to time. However, I think the best regulators of debate are the debaters themselves. Debate teaches communication, research, organization, logic, problem-solving, and, yes, analyzing both sides of an issue.

I think there's much more believing and much less rhetoric than you perceive, John. So, if there are some pen-twirling, squirrelly debaters out there that you don't care for, attack those individuals' actions, not the whole group or activity itself.

So, in essence, I never thought of making love to Marcia Brady. When I saw her on the television there was just the feeling in the heart that tugged, that smiled, that glazed over my eyes.

During some late nights, my friends have laughed at me as I have told them of my crush on the eldest Brady sister. Well, okay, they laugh at the next part.

See, one night after thinking about marrying Marcia Brady/Maureen McCormick, I had a dream.

In the dream, she and I were on a date. I was driving my mom and dad's blue Gran Torino station wagon (at seven, mind you). Marcia and I were in front of the drugstore in downtown Alta Vista.

Then she started laughing. So did my family. So did my friends. So did the rest of the Bradys. Everyone snickered. Mom and Dad. Corey, Robbie, Cardinal, Ewack. The Bradys. Sam the Butcher.

And there was Marcia, looking at me in my dream, laughing like she did in the episode where Cousin Oliver starts the big pie fight on the movie lot.

Then I heard why.

I guess the polite word is flatulence, and Marcia was having plenty of it. From that point on, the romance kind of left our relationship.

So, I guess in retrospect age seven was the In Love with Marcia Brady Stage. Then came age eight. And nine. And ten. And on and on, never to find a home in syndication. Hell, none of us are young forever.

What debating rules are all about

Editor,

I am writing this in response to John Hawks' March 29 "debater bashing" column.

John, John, John. Shame on you, attacking all those debaters when they weren't even around to defend themselves. So, I take up the gauntlet on behalf of the KSU debate squad.

Now, the basic gist of your article (as I see it) is that you don't like debaters because they're two-faced, conniving, hypocritical bastards, and you used the example of the squirrel case. First of all, please realize that using that example is like using "Trees" (I think that I shall never see/A poem as lovely as a tree;) as an example of good poetry. I agree, that wasn't a serious case, it was made to win debates but that's not what debate's about.

Remember, the Affirmative team is supposed to analyze a proposed problem and give what they believe to be the best solution, and the Negative team is supposed to defend the status quo, or simply show that the Affirmative's case isn't a good idea. An Affirmative team chose that squirrel case, they didn't get stuck with it on a coin toss. Most Affirmative teams use their research, problem-solving skills and common sense to develop a sound, workable, advantageous case. True, some abuse the activity, but then they're not playing by the rules, and unless they're really good, don't win very often.

When on the Negative side, you may not believe the status quo is the best option, but most of the time you certainly won't believe that the Affirmative's case is either. So, you concentrate on using your problem-solving skills and common sense, and superior cognitive ability to attack their case.

This is how debate is supposed to work, and it is corrupted from time to time. However, I think the best regulators of debate are the debaters themselves. Debate teaches communication, research, organization, logic, problem-solving, and, yes, analyzing both sides of an issue.

I think there's much more believing and much less rhetoric than you perceive, John. So, if there are some pen-twirling, squirrelly debaters out there that you don't care for, attack those individuals' actions, not the whole group or activity itself.

Candidates want to see involvement with fun

Wissman said together. They stood up and had their hands tied behind their backs. Wissman said this would be a common theme in their administration, and they would conduct one meeting a week with their hands tied behind their backs.

Then the two sat down and offered some challenges to the people of K-State.

"The first thing is we want to issue a challenge to the students of Kansas State University," Truhlar said. "We promise for every vote we get in the general election, we will do one push-up in front of the Kansas State Union, whether we win or not."

"If we win the entire thing, the day after we are actually elected, the runners-up get to shave our heads in the Union publicly," he said.

"We issue a different challenge to the administration. At the time of their choosing, whenever they want, we challenge President Jon Wefald and Vice President Robert Krause to a two-on-two pickup basketball game," Truhlar said.

The two agreed they might be at a disadvantage, however.

"President Wefald does have a mighty three-point shot," Wissman said.

"And Krause has a height advantage on both of us," Truhlar said.

Artistic improvements on campus was one of their main concerns.

"One of the things we propose would be to add a knife and spoon to complete the dinner set, because it's been alone for 20 years or so — it's time to complete the set," Wissman said, referring to the fork sculpture in front of King Hall.

But they also had strong feelings about K-State athletics.

"We'd like to hold the first basketball game of each year in Ahearn," Truhlar said. "Bring it back into there, hold it there, and if we could get the tickets free. Possibly you could donate a dollar to a charity, but if you wear purple, you get in free."

The two would also like to have people get in the KU-K-State football game free if they wear purple.

"This would foster extreme spirit within the school, and whoever would wear purple would get in free," Wissman said.

One of their jobs would be to increase the entertainment value of K-State, they said. One way would be to have a luau in Memorial Stadium in the beginning of the fall semester. The luau would feature well-known musical talent and a pig roast, the cost being free to students. Truhlar used to be the Finance Committee chair for Senate and said he knows where to get money for the event.

"I believe we have $28,000 in a reserve and $113,000 in a foundation account to be used for one-time student events. I think a luau, pig roast, band is a one-time event in the best interest of every student," Truhlar said. "I think it's time to have a lot more fun at K-State."

The pair would also like to get students more involved. One way would be a proposed "grudge football match" between the library staff and student with outstanding overdue fines. If the librarians lose, the fines would be forgiven. If the students lose, they have to pay. Wissman said this is a way to get students and faculty involved.

The pair had more ideas than this article has space for, but Truhlar and Wissman said they seriously just want students involved and possibly having some fun at the same time.

"Bringing out the best in students," Wissman said. "Increase attention in getting people involved in student government. We do encourage all the students to get out and vote, and we wish the best of luck to all the other candidates."

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN

Altman looking to strengthen 1993-94 schedule

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

This season's non-conference schedule for the K-State basketball team received plenty of criticism and, in some opinions, nearly cost the Wildcats a trip to the NCAA Tournament.

But with four seniors — Deryl Cunningham, Askia Jones, Anthony Beane and Ron Lucas — gracing next season's team, Cat coach Dana Altman said that he'd like to have a more difficult slate.

"I think our non-conference schedule will be a little tougher next year," Altman said. "With four seniors on the team, that's something we're really looking at. We're talking to different teams."

But Altman isn't quick to reveal which teams those are. The Wildcats have to travel to play both LaSalle and Temple next season, and Texas A&M will play at Bramlage Coliseum.

No more non-conference opponents, though, have been revealed.

The Aggies finished the regular season with a 10-17 record. LaSalle was an even 13-13, and Temple was one of the final eight teams in the NCAA Tournament, eventually falling to Michigan, 77-72, last weekend.

"We've got other teams finalized, but not to the point that we want to release them," Altman said.

The non-conference teams on K-State's 1992-93 schedule finished the regular season with a combined record of 129-

175. Six of the 12 non-conference foes won nine games or less — including just four wins apiece for Sam Houston State and Central Connecticut State.

"I thought our schedule fit this team," of teams that were developed. It helped us develop."

But now that the Wildcats are fresh off their first NCAA Tournament appearance during Altman's coaching career and have a couple of harder games."

Easier said than done.

"It's nice to get Michigan and Arizona and those people," Altman said. "But all those teams have a reluctance to travel and schedule differently," he said. "We'll try to set the schedule that we think gives us the best chance to develop our basketball team."

This season's weak non-conference schedule meant an even weaker power ranking, one of the main factors in choosing the 64-team NCAA Tournament field.

K-State's final regular-season ranking was 52 — ahead of only Colorado's 112 for lowest in the conference. Ten of the Cats' 12 non-conference opponents had a power ranking of 132 or lower, and three were below 269. There are 300 Division-I teams.

But Cunningham said he wasn't so sure it would have been the result of a weak schedule had the Cats not gone to the Big Dance.

"You can't blame the schedule," he said. "I would have said that there were some games that we should have won — Nevada-Reno, Wichita State. I don't think it's the schedule."

The Wolfpack and the Shockers finished the season with a combined 17-34 record.

One facet of the schedule that is all but etched in stone is a trip to Sweden May 13-24, where the Cats will probably play six games.

"That will be fun," Cunningham said. "It should be really interesting."

"But I'm not too excited about the plane trip over there."

Wildcats left out of 1993 NIT preseason tourney

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

The Wildcats will play in the NIT preseason tournament to kick off the 1994-95 basketball season.

Good news, right? Depends on who you ask.

"I'm disappointed that we didn't stay with the original plan," K-State coach Dana Altman said.

The original plan included a trip to that same tournament at the start of the 1993-94 season — a time when the Wildcats will have four seniors.

"It was a year that I thought would be a good year for us to go to the NIT," he said. "I'm not sure what happened with the discussion of the NIT. I was not involved in that, and I was informed that we'd be going in 1994."

Former athletic director Milt

Richards, who was dealing with the NIT selection committee, said Wednesday evening that the decision was up to Altman.

"As far as I was concerned as the director of athletics, that was entirely up to the men's head coach," he said. "The last I remember, the decision was in Coach Altman's hands."

"I had some discussions with Coach Altman about the NIT, and he expressed some very legitimate concerns. But the decision as to whether or not the K-State basketball team was to play in the NIT preseason tournament would have been entirely up to him."

Jim Epps, interim athletic director who took over following Richards' January resignation, said that he had no discussions with the NIT about the 1993 tournament.

Altman said. "I still stand by that."

"In December, we were a basketball team that had a lot of developing to do. We were in no position to be playing a lot indeed developed, the schedule will be made accordingly."

"I don't want the same schedule," Cunningham said. "Hopefully, we'll have play on the road. You can't just pick up the phone, call someone and say, 'Let's play.'

"Every year, we'll approach our

Cat golfers riding last season's success

Women use power of positive thinking

RON LACKEY
Collegian

Last season, the K-State women's golf team ended a 13-year stretch of finishing last in the Big Eight.

Last Monday and Tuesday, the Wildcats took another step toward continuing that success by winning the Southwest Missouri State Invitational.

After the team's strong showing, the team is showing improvement not only on its mental game but on its score card as well.

Coach Mark Elliott said the team has a couple of standouts who are stepping up their games — Valerie Hahn and Denise Pottle.

"Valerie is playing well," Elliott said. "She had scores of 76 and 83 on a very hard course."

Elliott said the players were not changing their strategy but their levels of confidence.

"Denise did not play much as a sophomore," he said. "She couldn't get into the lineup with some of the talent we had. She was lacking confidence, but this year she came out and played well."

"She expects good things to happen. Denise is making the biggest improvement on the team."

Confidence can be an important factor in the success of the team, especially when the weather does not cooperate with practice.

"The weather goes back to the mental side of golf," Elliott said. "We have no control over the weather, and you shouldn't worry about things that you can't control."

Still, he said the weather does have an effect.

"It makes it harder," he said. "But there are things that they can do. They go to Brandeberry (Indoor Complex) and practice in there."

"When they do get out on the course, they really have to be focused — especially when you haven't been able to get outside as much as you would like."

Thinking positively is the key, Elliott said.

"Golf at this level is a game that is in the mind," he said. "They have the fundamentals they need to improve and be more consistent, but it comes to a point where they have to think positively."

"You have got to think where you want the ball to go. When you think negatively, bad things happen."

The Wildcats' next contest is April 12-13 in Norman, Okla., where Oklahoma will play host to the Susie Maxwell Berning Classic.

Men aiming to qualify for NAAs

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

The K-State men's golf team is continuing to build on its successes from last season.

Last spring, the team finished sixth in the Big Eight — ending a 15-year drought in the Big Eight cellar.

This spring, Mark Elliott, the men's golf coach, said the players expect more from themselves.

"I feel we have better players, and the team is more dedicated," he said. "These guys' attitudes are better than in the past, and I expect a lot more out of them."

Brett Waldman, a sophomore on the squad, said he agrees.

"I think in the last year, the attitude has been better," he said. "Everyone wants to work harder to get better."

Elliott said his team's outlook for regionals is positive.

"We have a good chance to qualify for NCAA regionals, which would be the first time in K-State golf history," he said.

The team is led by senior Richard Laing, who has an average of 74.8 strokes per round and was a preseason all-American by Golf Digest.

Laing said he thinks the team's confidence was a problem in the Southwestern Missouri State Invitational March 22-23, in which the team placed third.

"Our team confidence is down a little," Laing said. "The lack of playing and the lack of practicing is hurting our confidence."

Waldman, who has the second-best average with 75.3 strokes per round and had the best average in the fall season with 74.2 mark, said the team does not have it together yet.

"We just haven't clicked," he said. "I don't know if people know what their abilities are or if they should trust their abilities."

The team placed ninth in the its first time out this season at the Baylor Spring Invitational.

Laing said the team didn't do as badly as what the placing shows.

"It didn't hurt our confidence because 36 holes were rained out," he said.

"We just played one round, and we just didn't shoot lights out in the first round."

► GASKINS NAMED TRACKSTER OF THE MONTH

K-State high jumper Percell Gaskins was selected as the male Big Eight trackster of the month for March, the conference announced.

Gaskins won the high jump title at the 1993 NCAA Indoor Track and Field Championships in Indianapolis on March 12. His leap of 7 feet, 5 1/4 inches was the best in the nation for the collegiate indoor season and set a school record.

► MINNESOTA TOPS HOYAS FOR NIT CROWN

NEW YORK (AP) — Arriel McDonald scored 14 of his 20 points in the second half and the Golden Gophers withstood a late Georgetown rally to beat the Hoyas 62-61 Wednesday night for their first NIT championship.

Minnesota (22-10) won despite going scoreless over the last 4 1/2 minutes.

Georgetown (20-13) scored 10 straight points, cutting Minnesota's lead to 62-61 with 1:41 left. But neither team could score the rest of the way.

Chiefs lose 10-year veteran; Lutz signs with Detroit Lions

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Veteran lineman David Lutz saw an opportunity with the Detroit Lions and took it.

Lutz, a second-round draft choice of Kansas City in 1983 and a starter in each of his 10 years with the Chiefs, signed a two-year, $2.6 million deal with the Lions.

The departure of Lutz leaves the Chiefs with a big hole on the right side of their offensive line. Right tackle Derrick Graham had extensive knee surgery last season, although he is expected to be ready for the start of the season.

"I'm going to miss Kansas City," Lutz, 33, said. "I liked it there. But with the changes in the offense it would have been like playing on a new team anyway."

"I'm excited about this opportunity. It will be fun blocking for Barry Sanders."

The Chiefs have been frustrated the past few seasons by their inability to produce the big play and quick score on offense. Coach Marty Schottenheimer has favored an offense centered on a pounding running game but plans to switch this year to a San Francisco-style offense that relies on a short, quick passing game.

Detroit lost two linemen to tragic accidents. Right guard Mike Utley suffered a paralyzing neck injury in the 1991 season. Right guard Eric Andolsek was hit by a truck and killed last year.

On Tuesday, the Chiefs worked out 33-year-old running back Marcus Allen, the type of versatile back they are looking for in the new offense. Although Allen is also 33, he prides himself on being able to run, catch passes and block.

"I want to be utilized," Allen said. "I feel I've been under-utilized the last couple of years."

SUPREME COURT

Justice blocks abortion restriction

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A Supreme Court justice temporarily blocked a restrictive North Dakota abortion law from taking effect Wednesday, responding to a claim it unduly limits women's constitutional rights.

Justice Harry Blackmun ordered state officials to postpone enforcing the law until the full Supreme Court studies an emergency request by operators of North Dakota's only abortion clinic.

The court is expected to discuss the case at its weekly closed-door conference Friday.

The Fargo Women's Health Organization had challenged the 1991 law, which requires a 24-hour waiting period after a woman is told of medical risks, the fetus' approximate age and alternatives to abortion.

Those provisions are similar to Pennsylvania restrictions the Supreme Court upheld last year while also reaffirming the constitutional right to abortion.

States may enact restrictions as long as they do not create an undue burden on a woman's ability to obtain an abortion, the high court ruled in the Pennsylvania case.

The Fargo clinic's operators contend that since it is the state's only abortion clinic, North Dakota restrictions create such a burden. Women come to the clinic from long distances — sometimes from other states and Canada — and the 24-hour waiting period creates a hardship for them, the clinic's lawsuit said.

U.S. District Judge Rodney

Webb upheld the law in February and declined to delay its effect while the clinic's operators appealed.

The Eighth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals granted a temporary delay but decided Tuesday to let the law take effect while it studies the case. Arguments before the appeals court are scheduled for April 14.

The clinic's operators then asked Blackmun to block the law from taking effect until the appeals court rules.

Brandon Lee dies after movie accident

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WILMINGTON — Actor Brandon Lee, son of martial arts movie legend Bruce Lee who died at age 32, was killed Wednesday by a projectile believed to have come from a gun on the set of the movie he was starring in.

Lee, 28, was struck in the abdomen when a gun rigged to shoot blanks fired. He died at New Hanover Regional Medical Center, where he had undergone surgery, said center spokeswoman Cathy Painter. Lee died nearly 12 hours after being brought to the emergency ward, she said.

Dr. Warren W. McMurtry, the surgeon, said the intestinal injuries and major vascular injuries were consistent with a bullet wound. "I felt that that was what we were most likely dealing with," he said.

The entry wound was about the size of a silver dollar and the injury extended in a straight line to the spine, McMurtry said. X-rays showed a metallic object lodged against the spine. An autopsy was expected to be conducted Thursday.

Police said Lee was carrying a grocery bag that contained a small explosive charge, used to simulate gunfire, during the filming of a scene. But McMurtry said he saw no signs of injuries that might have been associated with an explosion.

The actor was starring in "The Crow," an action-adventure film based on an adult comic book of the same name.

about the University."

Michelle Munson, sophomore in chemical engineering and pre-law, is running with Doug Schwenk, senior in pre-medicine. She said the goals of her and her partner were to improve the accountability of student government.

"The best way to improve the accountability is to have mandatory student approval of all fee increases. We stand for that above all else," Munson said.

Munson said she feels the ticket she is running on is diverse because of the fact she is a female.

"I am able to represent half of the student body because I am female."

Abdul Ebadi, junior in computer engineering, said he and his running mate, Sid Turakhia, junior in mathematics, would work to make teachers more responsible for teaching.

"Teachers should be able to distribute more of their time for students," Ebadi said.

Jeff Peterson, junior in animal science, is running with Fred Wingert, junior in business. He said that one of their main concerns was to establish an alumni connection with an ambassador program.

Peterson said that he would make a good vice president because of his laid-back nature.

"I am willing to listen to just about anything anyone has to say. I wouldn't mind staying up until four in the morning listening to someone."

Syphilis might have different beginnings

CORI CORNELISON
Collegian

Surprising evidence may prove syphilis originated before Christopher Columbus ever discovered America.

Physical anthropologist and paleopathologist Ann Stirland spoke to a group of students and faculty Wednesday in Waters Hall.

Stirland, a K-State alumna, has been conducting archaeological research on skeletons from a late medieval cemetery in Norwich, England.

Stirland said she believes the cemetery was established sometime in the 1100s. Four to six hundred skeletons were excavated by machinery, while 436 are being worked on by Stirland and her archaeology team. Stirland said she thinks the cemetery was intended for the burials of lepers and prostitutes.

The burial patterns of the cemetery are unique — not only in England but also in other parts of Europe, Stirland said. There were at least 20 group burials, which is uncommon for a Catholic church. A number of the skeletons were buried face-down and tossed in carelessly, Stirland said. She said those are bizarre circumstances for a Christian cemetery.

Slides of the skeletons were presented as evidence that numbers of cases of leprosy and three cases of syphilis were possibly present among these people.

The best of the three cases of syphilis was found on a skull that had 10 areas where changes occurred. On the skull there was proof there was an initial, middle and final process in healing of scars, craters and cavitations on the skull where the skull had healed itself.

There are two different types of syphilis — endemic and venereal. Endemic syphilis is in the form of measles and chicken pox from moist areas. Venereal syphilis is sexually transmitted.

Stirland said she believes Columbus and his crew brought back endemic syphilis to Europe. The disease was then spread through different habits in both venereal and endemic forms.

"It changes our understanding of history," Walter Adams, professor of archeology, said.

Stirland said she plans on publishing a book on the findings from the cemetery within the next 12 months. She said she hopes to complete her research sometime in 1994.

"I honestly feel that a definite credit to the college has been established, and I'm surprised more students didn't come," Collin Wright, junior in archeology, said.

he said. "Until we know what the costs are, we can't pursue incorporation."

Turakhia said incorporation of SGA would go along with the theme of his campaign.

"If we get incorporated, we get control," he said. "When it empowers students, I'm all for it."

The final question from the moderator was about the proposed shuttle transit and the timetable for its implementation.

"The parking issue is more than just cars," Skoog said. "We've got feet, let's walk to campus."

Mader said the results of an upcoming April feasibility study may show the possibility of a shuttle system being in place by the fall semester of 1994.

Bill would increase general funding

Station receives no tuition. Accordingly, Extension budget enhancements will not be equal to those of the University.

President Jon Wefald said it may be better to maintain the University's current budget for fiscal year 1994 if the bill includes certain cuts.

"What we don't want to happen — and I think we all agree on this — is that if the bill ends with a 2.5-percent increase for faculty salary increases and a 3.5-percent increase for other operating expenses, and then (legislators) turn around during the last week of the veto session and say they don't have the revenue, and have an across-the-board cut of, for example, 3 percent, then we would better to stay even with what we have now," Wefald said.

Tom Rawson, vice president of administration and finance, said the question of whether or not to increase salaries is a principal concern with this bill.

"Under the Chronister Plan, the general fund increase by 2 percent a year (for the main campus) still leaves tuition money to increase the budget," Rawson said. "The Agricultural Experimentation Station and Cooperative Extension goes to a 3-percent annual general fund increase for the three-year period, but it doesn't have the tuition money.

"They are established as a separately funded unit, with no tuition in the budget," he said. "They rely very heavily on the general fund."

As for the future of the bill, Wefald said he also hopes an interim study will be conducted.

"In the Legislature, there is a great debate going on about how much money the students should have to pay," he said. "The question that's going on now is who should pay more, the students or the taxpayers."

"Legislators are saying now, right or wrong, that maybe the students should be paying more."

ESSENTIALS

Is your fiancé or your friend more important to you?

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I know you've been receiving some rather screwball letters lately, but I promise this is not one of them. (For one thing, it has nothing to do with sex.)

I became very good friends with a guy from another college. We met through a game that is played through the mail. He is very smart and very friendly. We finally ended up calling each other on the phone. I eventually met him. He came here to spend his spring break with me.

Now, I have been engaged, and my fiancé knew all along about our friendship. He encouraged me to meet my new friend.

We had a wonderful week together, staying up till all hours talking. But it has strained my relationship with my fiancé. He liked my friend well enough, but he found himself jealous of the time my friend and I were having together. He did not act very nice to me when all three of us went out together.

When my friend left, my fiancé started fighting with me. He really thought that I was going to leave him. This could not have been further from the truth, but right then I was considering it. He said some very cruel and untrue things during the fight, deliberately trying to hurt me.

We eventually worked things out. Now, however, I find myself unwilling to talk to him when I need to. Instead, I've been turning to my friend. Neither one of us wants anything more than the friendship we've got, but he is worried that he is coming between my fiancé and me. And I am getting worried that I'm relying too much on my friend emotionally.

Am I wrong in wanting to talk to my friend more? My fiancé and I are slowly starting to talk about things again, but I still hurt from what he did. I don't want to give up. I still love him very much. But I don't want to give up my friendship, which I'm afraid he'll ask me to do someday. Please help. I am very confused right now.

Emotionally Dependent

DEAR DEPENDENT,

I think you've helped identify your own problem in this situation. You need to ask yourself why you feel more comfortable turning to your friend instead of your fiancé for support.

In order to be involved in an equal, communicating relationship with another person, you need to be aware that if you choose your friend over your fiancé, you must expect that your relationship will inevitably suffer.

Another problem is your friend coming to stay with you over spring break. If he stayed alone with you, shouldn't you expect your fiancé to be slightly suspicious?

You need to have a long talk with your fiancé about the situation and get everything on each of your minds vented to one another. The longer you wait, the more distance that will come between both of you.

As for your friend, if your fiancé is understanding and secure with your relationship, he should be accepting of your friend. If not, you must decide if your friend is that important to you and if you are willing to give up on your fiancé.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have a huge problem. I'm 19 and I have never had a relationship with a woman. I'm jealous of the guys living on my dorm floor because they have girlfriends or get laid. I'm not queer, and I don't find men attractive. My friends make fun of me because I watch pornographic movies and dream about girls to satisfy my sexual desires. My roommate leaves every weekend and I masturbate then. In Derby Dining Center I watch girls and the guys call me a "Walking Hormone." Am I normal? Is there a girl for me? I need your help.

Porno Dan

DEAR ANXIOUS HORMONE,

You do have a huge problem — lack of self-control. So you don't have a girlfriend and you can't get laid — what's new? Grow up. I guess you must be somewhat normal because there are so many other fools like you out there bellyaching about the same meaningless topics.

I can tell you right now the reason you don't have a girlfriend is your fetish for pornography and thoughts of wanting to get laid. No girl goes for that.

It sounds to me as if this letter revolves around your desire for sex, in which case I hope for any girl's sake they don't end up with you until you change your views.

FRIDAY

APRIL 2, 1993

KANSAS STATE UNIVERSITY, MANHATTAN, KANSAS 66506

VOLUME 99, NUMBER 127

Funds allocated, smoking ban held

MICHELLE ROGERS
Collegian

It was a short, 2-1/2 hour meeting for Student Senate Thursday night.

Allocations to five groups began the meeting, with the first allocation going to Students for Disability Awareness, which works to increase sensitivity towards physically disabled students.

SDA also functions as a liaison between administration and students.

The group was allocated a total of $640.98, with $251 specifically allocated for the shuttle service for disabled students.

Native American Student Body, which provides scholastic and moral support to the Native American students and educates the community on Native American issues and culture, received $1,224.70 in allocations.

The money will be used for a Columbus Day presentation on October 12 and junior college recruitment.

Rainforest Action Group, an environmental education organization that focuses on the destruction of the Earth's rainforests, was allocated a total of $870.50 toward two projects. These projects include a Rainforest Awareness Week and an information table.

Students for the Right to Life, which educates and informs students about life issues and strives to protect all human life, received $646 for a speaker and an educational event.

In first readings, a reallocation of the student activity fee for academic competition teams was addressed.

If passed this bill would reallocate 30 cents per semester for full-time students, and 15 cents per semester for part-time students, of the current student activity fee to a special account for academic competition teams.

This bill would ensure the academic teams' continued participation on a national level.

Also in first readings was a resolution that would commend the debate team on its outstanding achievement as the 1993 national debate champions.

Two pieces of legislation were postponed until further dates. These include a bill that would decrease the student health fee and a resolution that would end the use of the K-State Union first floor commons area as a marketplace.

A special allocation was also passed to the KSU National Youth Service Program.

This allocation was in the amount of $292.13 and will be taken from the Reserves for Contingencies account.

The bill allows the allocation to defray costs of activities of the KSU National Youth Service Day.

After debate, the resolution that would allow consumption of tobacco in the Union failed.

City candidates field questions

WADE SISSON
Collegian

City Commission candidates answered questions about issues related to K-State during a noon-hour forum Thursday.

Candidates Bob Rogers, Edith Stunkel, Sydney Carlin, Gene Klingler, Tom Whalen and Steve Hall discussed such topics as student housing, public transportation and the relationship between K-State and the city of Manhattan.

Rental housing for students, which has inspired a continuing dialogue between students and commissioners, was discussed. The forum was co-sponsored by K-State Young Democrats and the Union Program Council Issues and Ideas Committee.

Building more affordable housing for students is part of the solution to inadequate or scarce housing, Klingler said.

"Ideally, I wish every landlord would have to live in their apartment before it was rented," Klingler said. "I think it would solve a lot of our problems."

Carlin cited that rental inspectors do make inspections upon request and are willing to help solve any problems.

Rogers said he was not satisfied with present rental property conditions.

"I think some of the apartments students must live in are ridiculous, and the rent some students must pay is outrageous," Rogers said.

More dialogue between Student Senate and the Landlord's Association of Manhattan could also help the situation, Hall said.

The city's role in creating a public transportation system also was discussed at the forum.

Klingler said the question is not whether the system is needed, but how it can be obtained affordably.

Klingler said he did not know if a transportation system would solve the parking problem on campus.

"We all want to be mobile, we all want wheels when we want them, and I don't know how much difference it would make," Klingler said.

Current proposal costs are too high, Whalen said.

"We would need to look at different types of projects than we've looked at before, or subsidization and where that money would come from," Whalen said.

Carlin said while she understands the concerns about parking, Manhattan's problem is comparatively small.

"I've battled the parking meters and parking lots myself," Carlin said. "Compared to other cities, our parking problems are small, even though to us they are not."

MANHATTAN CITY COMMISSION ELECTION

Tuesday, April 6

Polls are open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Candidates:

☒ Sydney Carlin ☒ Gene Klingler*
☒ Steve Hall ☒ Edith Stunkel*
☒ Bob Rogers ☒ Tom Whalen

The candidates are running for three positions. The top two will serve four-year terms, and the third highest will serve a two-year term.

How many does that make now?

Tim Orindgreff, sophomore in pre-medicine and life science, (right) and Tim Madden, senior in advertising, announce their candidacy for student body president and vice president at Christopher O'Bryan's Thursday afternoon. Orindgreff and Madden are the eighth pair to join the election hoopla.

Beer, bikes, cars and sex.

With these four credos in mind, the self-dubbed "Two Tims" joined the list of candidates for student body president and vice president at Christopher O'Bryan's in Aggieville.

Tim Orindgreff, sophomore in pre-medicine and life science, and Tim Madden, senior in advertising, are the eighth pair to announce their candidacies for student body president and vice president, respectively.

"The big reason we got into this was that we felt that college should be fun," Madden said. "This is the best time of our lives."

Orindgreff said he agrees.

"It's not that the Board of Regents and Farrell issues aren't important, but we've been watching this and said, 'Hey, there are things going on that are too political,'" Orindgreff said.

Neither candidate has any previous experience in student government.

"We're totally winging it," Orindgreff said. "We are nobodies in the scheme of things. We don't have any political experience."

"We don't have any student government experience. What we've got at this point is the knowledge of what we feel is important to a lot of people."

At the end of the announcement, Orindgreff clarified the statement.

"We aren't really winging it," he said. "We feel we can do just as well as anyone else."

Madden agreed with Orindgreff when he said their political inexperience is a plus for their ticket.

"Not many students know about SGA," Madden said. "We want to get everyone involved on campus."

"The reason we're running is to bring a fresh outlook to campus, and to make every day brighter," he said.

Their platform is based on four issues.

The candidates said they think beer should be sold in concession stands during sporting events and at Union Station. They also said beer should be allowed in the parking lot before and after the games.

"We want to allow money raised from beer sales to different campus organizations and causes," Madden said. "Those revenues would be incredible."

Orindgreff said the two also advocate using surplus Lafene

Means discusses heritage, dispels stereotypes

Russell Means, member of the Oglala Nation and resident of the Pine Ridge reservation in South Dakota, speaks with his hands during his speech Thursday in the K-State Union. Means told a crowd of more than 100 how the Indian peoples have been wronged by relative newcomers to this land.

Tomahawks and mascots are a part of the stereotypical image forced on the American Indian people, Russell Means, co-founder of the American Indian Movement, said.

"I am a human being that comes from the Oglala Nation," said Means, who lives on the Pine Ridge reservation in South Dakota. "I am not anybody's mascot, and I am not Jane Fonda's tomahawk chop."

Native American is a generic term of the Department of the Interior to designate the citizens who live on American trust territories, Means said, when speaking to about 150 students Thursday.

"We are very proud of where we come from," he said.

Some of the stereotypical images portray an Indian as a nomad, following the droppings of a buffalo to obtain meat to eat, he said. He rides his spotted pony at full speed to kill the racing buffalo. "In those days, horses were our Rolls Royces. The stereotype image always has us doing something idiotic," Means said.

The culture of the American Indian has included a knowledge of indigenous plants and astronomy, he said. Navaho Indians used plants for many purposes besides the traditional uses in western science.

"We know plants have answers to disease," Means said. "We had accomplished astronomers in every village."

Before exposure to the Aztec or Inca civilizations, the Europeans had poor sanitation habits, he said.

"We taught Europe about sanitation and sewage. And yet, we are considered primitives," he said.

The treatment of the American Indian is genocide or the day-to-day killing of the American Indian people, he said.

Disappearance of Indian songs in the American culture shows this country has almost affected its genocide program, Means said.

"In this country, I see the demise of our songs. Songs are how you hold on to who you are."

The world is currently experiencing a worldwide freedom movement, he said. This involves everyone except Americans and American Indians. Freedom was explained as the right of a citizen to live without a fear of the government.

Means will speak at 10:30 a.m. today in the Union Little Theatre.

CORRECTION

In the March 31 Collegian, the police reports incorrectly stated that Stacey L. Mindrup, 502 N. 12th St., was arrested for misdemeanor checks and failure to appear for speeding. The charges for failure to appear had been dropped in August 1992, and the misdemeanor was for only one check.

The Collegian prints police reports verbatim but regrets any inconvenience to Mindrup.

Q. & A.
About Student Financial Assistance

Q: Where is the Financial Aid Office located?

A: The office of Student Financial Assistance is located in Fairchild 104 and is handicap accessible by using the east ground floor entrance and elevators.

Q: How do I apply for Financial Aid at K-State?

A: You may pick up the free application for Federal Student Aid at Fairchild 104 between 9:00 a.m. and 4:45 p.m. (Yes, the office is open through the noon hour.) If you can't make it to our office during business hours, you may pick up a financial application outside our door at any time.

Q: Whom can I talk to if I have questions about the Financial Aid process?

A: The Financial Aid office is giving you the perfect opportunity to visit with someone—in person—during their open house April 5th through April 9th. Our entire office is looking forward to visiting with the students at K-State. We invite students to drop by and get acquainted.

Q: What happens during "Open House"?

A: The professional staff—including directors—will be available to answer your questions. Feel free to ask about the forms, application process, or any of the Federal Aid programs.

Q: Where do I leave my financial aid paperwork? Do you have a drop box?

A: Our office has two drop boxes. One is located outdoors by the parking meters in front of Fairchild Hall. The second drop box is located indoors near our office entrance at Fairchild 104 and is handicap accessible. Of course, you may always mail your paperwork or leave it with one of our reception area staff.

MAKING DOLLS

Sometimes a hobby can be more than just a way to relax

STEPHANIE HOELZEL

Collegian

Everything she does is done with care and sincerity.

Bertha Wilkinson is a client at Big Lakes Developmental Center and a worker at Throckmorton Hall's greenhouse.

Wilkinson's hobby is making dolls. Each doll is unique and made mostly of donated materials.

"Bertha makes the dolls with clothes that fit the personality of its recipients. She really enjoys doing it. It is an activity that gives her personal satisfaction," Steve Longshore, greenhouse work supervisor, said.

Making dolls is a way for Wilkinson to escape from people and relax.

"I really enjoy making dolls. It's relaxing. I do it for an hour or so," Wilkinson said. "I make dolls while I watch TV."

Most of the materials for her dolls are donated by people who know Wilkinson.

"People mainly donated old scraps of material for her to use. She buys the cotton stuffing and the yarn herself at Wal-Mart," Cheryl Strathe, supervised living advisor, said.

Most of the dolls resemble people, although she is also making some bunnies and cats, Wilkinson said. She designs them herself usually without a pattern.

"I make the dolls and bunnies myself. I don't use a pattern for them, but I just got a pattern for the cats. I try to dress them like the person they are for. I try to make the eyes like the person's, too," she said.

Wilkinson has been making the dolls off and on for four years, Strathe said. But for the last three or four months, she has been working really hard on them.

"She usually gives them away, but sometimes people offer to pay her for them. She gets really excited when people give her money for them," Strathe said. "Making these dolls is a way for her to give something to people, and it makes her feel good."

In addition to her doll making, Wilkinson helps in the greenhouse with plant propagation and maintenance. She also works in the workshop at Big Lakes Manhattan Area Training Center.

"I plant flowers, clean pots, sweep and separate flowers," she said. "In the workshop, I work with the saws. I help make spoons."

Wilkinson's hobby is a way for her to express herself, Longshore said.

"She's very self-motivated, and she gets satisfaction from making and sharing them," Longshore said.

J. KYLE WYATT/Collegian

Bertha Wilkinson begins work on another doll that will be made from recycled fabric donated by friends. The dolls are usually given away to the people who donate the materials. Wilkinson also works in the greenhouses at Throckmorton Hall.

LOCAL

City to provide Manhattan residents with week of clean-up

Program to save costs, protect local environment

KEVIN STRECKER

Collegian

The city of Manhattan is preparing for the 1993 Spring Clean-Up Program.

"The program was started years ago in an effort to reduce the amount of wastes going to the landfill," Jim Pearson, city manager, said.

"The program has been an annual event exempting last year," Pearson said. "Due to an increase in the costs of disposal, the city's budget wouldn't allow for it. After seeing the public's disappointment, the program was reinstated this year."

The program uses all the city's equipment and personnel for the job.

"After seeing how the program has grown, we are going to need more time to do the job," he said.

The program will run April 5-12. The city has been divided into sections, with a specific pick-up date assigned to each section.

"The city has to pay for everything hauled to the landfill," Chuck Williams, assistant director of public works, said. "But all grass clippings, leaves, and tree limbs can be placed on the county compost pile free of charge."

"Therefore, the materials must be separated when we pick them up. If not, we have to take everything to the landfill which is going to cost the city more money."

All materials left for pick-up should be in a bag or container and marked for pick-up.

"Do not use a container you wish to save, because it will be thrown away," Pearson said.

"The items should be put at the curb by 8 a.m. the morning of your area's scheduled pick-up," Pearson said. "It also needs to be separated from your normal trash, because that is picked up by private businesses."

"Some materials won't be picked up like tires, batteries, and household hazardous wastes," Pearson said. "If someone wants to get rid of household wastes, they can take them to Riley County shops across from Westloop for free."

And Williams said, "Please make sure everything is separated the way it should be because it is important for the environment as well as saving expenses for the community."

IN OUR OPINION

Education getting its due

By the Collegian Editorial Board

THE ISSUE

The Kansas Legislature has endorsed QPA and is considering stricter admission policies.

WE SUGGEST

These measures are necessary if future students are to have a competitive edge in the global market.

While a substantial proportion of the United States languishes in the low quality of its students' academic performance, the Kansas Legislature has taken important steps to ensure that the quality of education in our state moves in a positive direction.

The Legislature is currently considering setting admission standards for state universities.

Many would argue that the passage of this motion will limit many high-school students from gaining a college degree. But the time has since passed to raise placement standards across the board. This measure would deliver a clearly defined message to high-school students that access to a college education takes intense preparation and dedication.

Opportunity must be earned, not given.

Underscoring this idea is the state's adoption of Quality Performance Accreditation. This method of accrediting schools focuses on student performance as the measure of academic achievement. QPA is destined to be the law of the land, and if properly operated will be the foundation for preparing students for the needed strict entrance requirements of state universities.

Now, the Legislature must hold fast to its financing of $937.4 million in aid to schools. This amount is threatened by an impending omnibus bill that could whittle it down. The Legislature has already slashed its funding for state testing. Let's hope saner minds prevail when this package is debated.

Education is revered as the key to successfully taking American into the overwhelmingly competitive 21st century. Preparing students as well as possible in high school will allow them to overcome the challenges facing them. Kudos to Kansas for taking the initiative to accomplish this.

THE TALE OF ROY

Roy was 13 when the Larsons picked him up at social services. He'd been sitting in an orange plastic chair when they arrived, staring at the cracks in floor. Chuck Larson tapped the scrawny boy on the shoulder with his hairy finger.

"Roy," the overweight, red-faced man said. "We're Mr. and Mrs. Larson, your new family. You like to bowl?"

The boy looked up at Mr. Larson and said nothing. Roy took his bag in hand and stood up.

"Well, do ya?" Mr. Larson asked again.

Roy saw an expectant smile on Mrs. Larson's face. She smelled like the interior of a Lincoln Continental.

"Don't know how," he said.

Mr. Larson's smile sagged.

"Well, hell," he said. "Let's get on out to the car. It's getting to be late. The lawn needs mowed."

The Larsons were Roy's fourth family. Every Saturday morning he woke up to Chuck shaking the end of his bed.

"Time to mow the goddamn lawn," he'd say once Roy's eyes focused. "Get out there and mow."

On his way to mow, Roy would see Chuck lounged in his recliner, watching sports on the tube. Chuck always had a fresh Olympia in one hand and the remote control in the other.

Roy came to learn that he was one of many children the Larsons had taken in. All across the mantle there were pictures of the others they had had. They were all boys, Roy noticed, and they all seemed to be about his age.

The only thing that outnumbered the foster kid portraits were Chuck's bowling trophies. They were spread throughout the house. Two of the tallest were placed on either side of Chuck's recliner. Now and then, Chuck would rest his hands on both as if the recliner were a throne.

Mrs. Larson, who told Roy to call her Dolores, spent a lot of time in the kitchen or out shopping. She looked much younger than Chuck and never drank Olympia.

"I'll stick with wine, thank you," she'd say.

Chuck never paid the boy attention except to give orders and trade glances when the social services check came.

Dolores was different.

Occasionally, she'd interrupt Roy's mowing with a glass of lemonade. She'd say encouraging things like, "Ah, don't mind Chuck. He doesn't know any better. He means good."

She even seemed to take pleasure in serving Roy's turkey pot pies to him on his TV tray. In time, she began serving Roy before she'd serve Chuck.

"There you go," she'd say, setting his plate down with her red fingernails. Roy saw Chuck's frown more often.

A month after Roy moved in, Chuck had to go to a plumbers' convention. Roy watched him knock back a few Olympias before he headed out the door. It was Saturday morning, and Roy sat on the couch waiting for the dew to lift so he could get to the lawn.

Chuck didn't look like he wanted to leave. He kept looking at Roy, taking a swig of his beer and looking at the front door. He did this about three times before he said anything.

"You behave yourself, Roy. Ya hear?"

Roy nodded. When Chuck left, Roy sat for a moment in the recliner then headed out to the lawn.

It was a hot day, and Roy's uncut hair swung in his eyes. As he wiped the hair and sweat out of his eyes, he noticed Dolores on the back porch with a glass of lemonade in her hands.

She wore a silk kimono and was smiling more brightly than ever. Roy wiped his eyes again.

"Why don't you come inside to the air conditioning?" she asked as she handed him the lemonade. She led Roy by the hand to the living room. The recliner was gone. All the bowling trophies in the house were arranged in a big rectangle. In the center of the rectangle was a bear rug.

Roy and Mrs. Larson lay on the rug. Roy felt the faces of the other kids looking down at him from the mantel.

When it was all done, Roy went to the kitchen for a glass of water. That's when he heard Chuck bust in the front door.

"Jesus, Dolores," he heard Chuck whine. "Again?"

Roy tried to think quickly. He buttoned his jeans and reached in the fridge for the last Olympia. With that, he was out the door.

In 20 minutes, he was back at social services, waiting for his new family.

TOM LISTER

Trapesing Around in Gay Paris

SHAWN WOODFORD

I have to admit to a bit of embarrassment when people ask me what I did over spring break. Rather than stay at home and attempt to write my masters thesis like I should have, I accepted a friend's invitation to visit Europe. When I told my brother I was going to Paris and London, he called me a scumbag. This was the mildest of the responses among my so-called family and friends. (Boy, a little good fortune in your life can sure make other people cranky.)

What made this trip truly interesting was that my friend comes from Thailand, and I traveled with about 20 members of his family. "Multicultural" doesn't begin to describe the situation. I easily learned as much about Thailand and its people on this trip as I did about France or England. I discovered that Thais will eat Chinese food if there are no Thai restaurants available. Both London and Paris have many delightful Chinese restaurants. It also became painfully apparent to me that if I had to utilize chopsticks to eat on a regular basis, I would starve to death.

We spent the first part of spring break in Paris. The city pretty much fulfilled all the things I had heard and read about it. We saw all the usual tourist sites, including the Eiffel Tower, which looks much smaller in reality. I took a picture of the Arc de Triomphe, Napoleon's monument to all of his victories. When I got the picture developed, I realized every single person in history who has visited Paris must have this picture.

Later that day, we went to see Les Invalides, which had originally been built to give military invalids some place to go (Napoleon certainly created enough of them). Later, Napoleon himself was buried there, and it was converted into a military museum. The museum is a monument to French military prowess, which petered out considerably after the Battle of Waterloo in 1815. In fact, there was only one small painting of Waterloo in the whole building. Apparently, the French are a bit touchy about this.

I had heard a lot about how obnoxious the Parisians are supposed to be. It's all true. But then again, I heard a lot about how obnoxious New Yorkers are supposed to be, and that was true, too. It must be something about cities.

One day we all piled on a bus and drove out to Normandy. The French countryside is spectacularly beautiful. We had the opportunity to stop in the town of Giverny and see the home and garden of the impressionist painter Claude Monet. If I could sit and paint in that wondrous garden, I might produce something brilliant, too. Unlike Paris, the people in the countryside were very pleasant and didn't find the use of my limited French vocabulary to be a mortal insult.

On Wednesday morning, we flew on to London. London is a very cool city. Although the British can be a bit anal-retentive on occasion, and their food makes one long for the culinary expertise of McDonald's, London has the best record and book shops on the planet. It seemed like every other store on Oxford Street had compact discs or books in the window. It is readily obvious that the English, unlike their American cousins, can still read.

I had the chance to see "Les Misérables" at the Palace Theatre in the West End and the major tourist attractions such as Parliament and Big Ben. We went to some more museums, although an hour and 15 minutes is not enough time to truly experience the Egyptian exhibit at the British Museum. The best way to get to know a place is to walk it, and I walked up the Strand to Aldwych, then north to Russell Square, and then back down to New Oxford Street. Then I took a taxi back to the hotel.

Much to the disappointment of my friends, I made it back to Manhattan intact, with all of my luggage. I received a standing invitation to visit my friend's family in Bangkok. I did not bring back a cheesy Eiffel Tower key chain (too expensive). My thesis remains unwritten, but I know what the Moulin Rouge district of Paris looks like. Now that is what education is all about.

Write letters to make the world a little better

Editor,

My name is Jo Ellen Dungan, and I am a volunteer here at the Baltic Center. Our center is a unique place. People of different nationalities, languages and interests gather here with a common wish to work for a positive future through education and global awareness. We promote this through coordination of international exchanges, conferences and seminars. I am writing to you on behalf of our newly forming Quest Clubs here in the Baltic States.

Quest Clubs are groups of students from 12 to 20 years old who have gathered to "Think globally and act locally." Through a direct link with Cooperation for Peace, these groups can communicate with other groups worldwide. Quest Clubs focus on the peace issues we face today, such as environmental problems, human rights and global awareness.

The students we are working with have expressed an interest in creating friendship links worldwide. Therefore, I am contacting you for some assistance. We are in the midst of gathering names and addresses of pen-pals for the students here.

Anyone interested in sending and receiving international mail is invited to contact us. A short letter of introduction should include your name and address. The students here will then reply with details concerning themselves. Please send correspondences to:

BOOK BUY-BACK

Campaigners need a sturdier platform

Editor,

I would like to address Fred Wingert and Jeff Peterson about the article concerning their decision to run for student body president and vice president in the March 30 Collegian.

As an employee of the K-State Union Bookstore and a student of K-State, I don't appreciate the attitude they have about the Union. If the book buy-back problem is the hottest idea they can come up with for a campaign ticket, they are in trouble.

The Union doesn't keep the money from buy-back and distribute it among employees. A company comes in and purchases books back from you, not the bookstore. If you want to blame somebody for only getting wholesale prices on books, blame the professors. They are the ones who order new textbooks and cancel the present editions. We can't stock unwanted merchandise, can we?

Book prices may be high, but there is the writer, publisher, distributor and the Union to pay for bringing your books to the bookstore for you. No, it doesn't seem fair getting $3 back when you purchase a book for $25. That's the way the process works, and if you think you can change it, good luck.

All the money made in the Union goes back into it for the upkeep and activities that go on there. If I were you and running for student body president, I would do a little more research before putting so much blame on the Union. Give the Union a break and find a real mission to base your campaign on.

Cinderella stayed home for the Final Four

ASSOCIATED PRESS

There have been almost 4,000 basketball games played this season by Division I teams. There are three to go, and fans of the sport couldn't have asked for more.

All four teams left in the NCAA tournament have been ranked No. 1 at some point this season. Three of the Final Four started in the 64-team field as a top seed, one more than has ever made it that far.

Kansas vs. North Carolina and Kentucky vs. Michigan. What a way to end a season.

What a Final Four.

There'll be a week of: ■ Kansas, the only non-No. 1 seed left, claiming no one respects it, and everyone picks against it.

■ North Carolina coach Dean Smith evading questions about reaching the Final Four more than any man except John Wooden, but having come home with the nets cut down just once.

■ Kentucky fans reminding everyone how easily the Wildcats marched through the regional one year after the most crushing defeat of all.

■ Michigan explaining how the object is to win games by any margin and that the Wolverines really don't care if anyone likes them or not.

The first semifinal game Saturday night at the Superdome

— Kansas vs. North Carolina

— is a rematch of the first game of the 1991 Final Four, the one Smith wasn't around to see as he was ejected after being hit with his second technical foul. It made for an awkward postgame news conference considering Smith's Tar Heels had just been beaten by a Kansas team coached by his longtime assistant Roy Williams.

The Jayhawks are riding an attitude of being overlooked into

New Orleans.

"I was watching ESPN, and the man picked us to lose, and he was wrong again," KU guard Rex Walters said. "It feels good. It feels real good.

Heels had to go five extra minutes to beat Cincinnati and get Smith his ninth trip to the Final Four. His only national championship came in New Orleans when then-has enough of both to make this a close game.

Kentucky has won its four NCAA tournament games by an average of 31 points, and the Wildcats have done it inside and outside. The three-point barrage has forced teams to try and cover the post people one-on-one, and coach Rick Pitino's system has taken advantage throughout.

Pitino's Kentucky team last season came within a miracle buzzer-beater by Duke's Christian Laettner of getting there.

With only Jamal Mashburn back from last year's starting five, Pitino has done an impressive job in getting the Wildcats back to the Final Four for the first time since 1984.

And Mashburn isn't getting caught up in how impressive the wins were.

"It doesn't matter about the margin of victory. You can win by two points. It doesn't matter as long as you get the W," he said.

Now the Wildcats get Michigan, the only team back from last year's Final Four.

The Wolverines were known as the Fab Five then, when they lost to Duke by 20 in the title game.

As sophomores they have had to listen to a season-long litany of complaints about underachieving, despite the fact they only lost four games — two to Indiana, one to

Duke and one to Iowa — and beat two of the other teams in the Final Four, North Carolina and Kansas, on consecutive nights in the Rainbow Classic. It kept up in the NCAA as they looked less-than-impressive in winning their four games.

"We've been feeling the pressure," defensive specialist Ray

Jackson said. "This whole tournament we've been playing not to lose. I think now that we're back to the Final Four, we're going to let everything hang out."

Underdog Jayhawks succeed in spite of season's struggles

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — One of Kansas' top players walked out before the season began, and the Hawks' highly touted transfer, who was going to run away with newcomer-of-the-year honors, did not get a single vote.

A disappointment, many people called him, as Coach Roy Williams complained about lack of support among a home crowd that was 300 short of its 15,800.

The Jayhawks' senior point guard plunged from first-team to honorable mention in all-conference balloting, and their highly touted 7-foot-2 sophomore center fumbled and stumbled and failed to start.

Locked in a February slump, Kansas lost four of eight games to Division I opponents, creating such furrowed brows that Williams complained nobody appreciated all the good things his team did.

Then after bowing in the semifinals of their conference tournament to an arch-rival who hadn't beaten them in four years, the Jayhawks went into the NCAA tournament branded as prime upset fodder.

But is this supposedly overrated collection of also-rans getting ready to watch the Final Four from the comfort of their living room?

Not at all.

The Jayhawks are packing their bags — not to mention all their cares and woes — and heading for New Orleans.

Since losing to K-State in the Big Eight tournament semifinals, Williams' team has strung together four impressive NCAA wins.

Everything was going swimmingly for Roy and the boys when they blew out Louisville 98-77 on Jan. 16 and were leading the nation with a shooting percentage near 58 percent.

Starting with a 103-86 wipe-out of Wichita State in their first game of the new year, Kansas unleashed a seven-game winning streak, in which virtually everything and everybody clicked with precision and grace.

Rex Walters, one-half of Kansas' returning all-Big Eight guard tandem, was alternately terrific and brilliant. Even though point guard Adonis Jordan was not shooting the accuracy he flashed as a junior, he was still doing the things to win.

Darrin Hancock, the 6-7 junior college transfer, was not scoring more than a couple of feet away from the basket, however, and Greg Ostertag, the Texas high school all-American, could not dislodge senior center Eric Pauley.

Kansas also missed 6-8 Ben Davis, a gifted sophomore who transferred to Florida.

Nevertheless, they were No. 1 on Jan. 25 when Long Beach State came to town and hit the Jayhawks with a 64-49 defeat that felt like a punch to the solar plexus.

Suddenly, their inside game that had led to so many easy baskets got shut off. A Three No. 1 seeds? That's no fun

Here it is — time to dig out all the cliches. It's down to crunch time. Each team is just glad to still be playing. This one is for the whole shootin' match.

It's the Final Four — the final waltz for the Big Dance.

The picks are in.

USA Today said

Kentucky. Steve Rock goes out on a limb and picks Kansas. Scott Abel picks Kentucky. So do I.

Brian Anderson looks up the stats and says that the team winning tomorrow's second game will win the title (that team has won the title game since 1989).

David Eugene Frese, being the sports guru that he is, picked Kentucky during the selection show three weeks ago.

Dick Vitale has picked (in no particular order)

Kentucky, Kansas, Kentucky, North Carolina, Michigan, Kentucky, North Carolina, and on and on. In other words, he's changed his mind more times than a dog in a fire hydrant factory.

And even Rex Walters' favorite commentator, the Round Mound of the Profound, Mike Francese, is going with the Wildcats from the bluegrass state.

And why not. Kentucky has dominated every team it has played in a tournament that (and here's the catch phrase), in my opinion, has been too predictable.

In other words, B-O-R-I-N-G stands for this year's N-C-A-A.

Granted, it's a credit to the selection committee that three of the four No. 1 seeds have made it this far and that the fourth made it to the Elite Eight.

Unfortunately, when the selection committee does this good of a job, the tournament suffers. After all, who's the Cinderella story?

Kansas? I think not.

Michigan? Are you kidding?

Underrated? No one.

Overrated? All of them.

The only segment of the tournament that was fun to watch was the West regional. The No. 2 seed, Arizona, gets knocked out early, and Santa Clara moves into the round of 32.

George Washington makes it into the round of sixteen after defeating powerful Southern.

Nothing held to form in that bracket. And that's what is fun about the NCAAAs.

But elsewhere, everything held pretty much to form. And to me, that makes this year's tournament a yawner.

Close games have been a rarity, and blowouts have been the norm — witness North Carolina over Rhode Island and Kentucky over Florida State, among others.

Let's be honest. As much as we all want to see this grand amassing of talent that is present in New Orleans, we all would rather see a team like George Washington playing the big boys.

Everyone loves the underdog. It's as American as hot dogs, apple pie and no inter-divisional play in baseball.

But there have been few upsets this year. That's not right — first of all because I'm going to lose money.

But also, that's not what makes the NCAA Tournament supposedly worth the millions of dollars CBS pays to monopolize the broadcasts.

That's not what excites every basketball fan when the tournament comes around.

That's not why every team dreams of making the Big Dance.

The fun comes when the Cinderellas have a shot to win it all, which they didn't this year.

So, my congratulations to the selection committee for doing a fine job in seeding the teams. Let's hope it doesn't happen again.

K-State to battle Cyclones, Cornhuskers

RON LACKEY

After a tough preseason schedule and a not-so-tough Missouri Tiger opponent, the Wildcat tennis team leaves for Ames, Iowa, and Lincoln, Neb., to face its first serious Big Eight threats.

"Both the Iowa State and Nebraska match will be real tough," Coach Steve Bietau said. "They will both be good tests for us."

The Wildcats came out on top in both contests a year ago. In Ames, K-State came away with an 8-1 victory. In Lincoln, the Wildcats posted a 6-3 win over the Huskers.

Bietau said things must go well in order for the team to come out on top.

"If we do a good job and play well, we can win," he said. "If we don't, I will be surprised if we do."

The Wildcats had some formidable opponents on the non-conference schedule, including the likes of Notre Dame and Purdue. The idea was to play quality teams that would compare to the top of the Big Eight.

"The preseason schedule is very competitive," Bietau said. "It gives us a chance to play teams that are comparable to the top teams in the conference. So, we're accustomed to the competition."

Weather conditions affect the team, Bietau said. Not the indoor play, but it's tough to squeeze six matches onto three courts.

"It can double our time there," he said. "A dual match could last six or seven hours. Then we have to hop on a bus and drive to Lincoln."

The No. 1 player for the Wildcat squad, Susana Labrador, stressed the importance of the contests.

"I expect us to win," she said. "But the thing I'm really concerned with is these matches are very, very important for us because these will seat us in the Big Eight tournament."

"Nebraska and Iowa State play very close to our level, but I think that we can beat them," she said. "After this, we will be playing teams like Oklahoma State and Kansas."

Although the Wildcats have seen this weekend's opponents in other tournaments, they have yet to play any this season.

"We got to watch some of the players in our conference play," Labrador said. "But we never actually played them."

"Right now is like a new beginning for us."

Iowa State baseball team looking for 1st Big 8 win

BRIAN ANDERSON

When K-State coach Mike Clark looks at the Iowa State baseball team, he sees a team similar to his squad — both have been hampered by the weather and the struggles of a young team.

"This is one of the few times that we will play a team that has played fewer games than we have," said Clark, whose team plays a three-game series this weekend against the Cyclones, 6-10 overall and 0-5 in Big Eight play.

The games, which were originally scheduled to be played in Ames, Iowa, will be at K-State's Frank Myers Field because of the poor field conditions in Iowa. Iowa State hasn't been host to a game yet this season.

The two teams will play a double-header starting at 1:30 p.m. Saturday. The Sunday game is scheduled for 1 p.m.

"They haven't played a game on their field," Clark said. "We are playing on even turf. Bobby (Randall, Cyclone coach) and I want to practice, but because of the bad weather, we can't get out on the field and get ready to play."

Clark said he is searching for players to step up and establish themselves in the lineup.

"I'm looking for consistency from our players," he said. "We had it after the Creighton game and the Missouri series, but the weather fouled us up."

Since the win over Creighton on March 24, several players have stepped into the spotlight.

Kevin Wicker struck out five Blue Jays and gave up one run in seven innings to earn his first win of the season against Creighton.

Chris Wolf has the hot bat, with six hits in his last 14 at bats, seven runs batted in and two home runs.

K-State, 8-14 and 1-2, played its best ball of the season last weekend against Missouri — despite losing two out of three games.

"We put three good ballgames together, and now, we have to put together three good ballgames again," Clark said. "Some time during the season, we're going to put together a nice stretch of games. I'd like to see it start right now."

If it's going to start in the first game against Iowa State, it will begin with pitcher Dan Driskill.

Driskill, who got the Cats' only win last year against the Cyclones, has not walked a batter in his last 17 innings and has thrown three complete games in his last three starts.

Driskill, 2-4, said he thinks the Cyclones' inexperience at the plate will be good for him.

"I hope I can strike them out a lot," said Driskill, who leads the team in strikeouts with 33.

Driskill will battle Brad Kaufman (0-2) in the first game and, Rob Merriman (2-2) faces Mike Maurer (2-1) in the second game.

For Sunday's game, Scott Dreiling (1-2) heads to the mound for K-State, opposed by Brian Binversie (1-2).

Driskill said this is an important series for the Cats.

"If we beat them in all three games, we put them out of the race and put us into the Big Eight tournament."

TRACK

Wildcats looking to gain experience

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

The K-State track and field teams will travel to the Tyson Invitational Saturday, hoping to gain a little more much-needed experience.

"Realistically, it's going to take much of the outdoor season to get our team together," interim track coach Cliff Rovelto said. "It's still early, and we're still training kids awfully hard right now."

"For some, it is just their first or second meet ever, and we want people to have as many competitive opportunities as we can."

This being just the second meet of the season, Rovelto said he is going into the meet concerned with how each individual performs moreso than her or his final result.

"Everyone's kind of in the same boat," he said. "It's early for everyone."

"But we're not going to do anything special to prepare for this meet. We didn't rest up this week. We didn't do anything different. The first meet that we'll really do that for is the Kansas Relays."

The Kansas Relays will be on April 14-17 in Lawrence.

"Until then," Rovelto said. "We'll just take what comes."

K-State opened the outdoor season last weekend with a pair of second-place finishes in the Arizona Invitational. Just three teams competed in that meet — a far cry from the 11 this weekend.

"Traditionally, this meet has been a powerhouse meet," Rovelto said. "There will be national powers in every single competition. I expect this to be a very, very good meet."

Defending national champion Arkansas will be host of the meet. Teams from Nebraska, Oklahoma State and Wichita State also will compete.

But the competition in one event, the women's high jump, may not be as stiff as it was in last weekend's meet when the top three jumpers in the nation — including K-State's Gwen Wentland — competed.

"You can't top that type of competition," Wentland said. "The prestige involved in last week's meet can't be beat."

Wentland, who took second place in the event, was beat out by a former Olympian.

The Wildcat men may have a distinct disadvantage in the sprinting events. With football spring drills beginning Saturday, K-State will be without the services of Thomas Randolph, J.J. Smith, Travis Livingston or high jumper and sprinter Percell Gaskins.

"It's going to be difficult to run the sprints without those guys," Rovelto said. "We just can't do it."

Although the Wildcats are using this time of the season to prepare them for Kansas Relays and the NCAA's, don't expect Wentland to take any meet lightly.

"We are just working toward the end," she said. "But I've been training all week for this meet. I'm sore. I'm tired."

"But it wouldn't be worth going down there if I didn't think I could win," Wentland said. "I'm definitely going down there to win."

"There's no doubt about it."

SPORTS DIGEST

► SKY SUITES SOLD OUT

All 22 of the sky suites currently being constructed as part of the new $3.3 million, five-story press box have been sold, K-State interim athletic director Jim Epps said.

The sky suites, which will be accessible by an elevator, are purchased with a one-time building access fee of $50,000. In addition, purchasers must agree to five years at $10,000 a year. The sky suites will be complete with air conditioning, theater-type seating and fully catered meals.

Most of the 128 VIP club seats have been sold, but he wasn't sure of the exact number.

The club seats cost $500 a year, and purchasers must agree to a five-year contract.

Both the Wildcat lacrosse and men's soccer teams will compete in Manhattan this weekend, each team playing home games on Saturday afternoon.

The lacrosse team will play its third league game of the season at 1:30 Saturday against Oklahoma State at Memorial Stadium.

The K-State lacrosse team is currently 3-2 overall and 2-0 in league play.

The men's soccer team will play Wichita State at 5 p.m. Saturday at Frank Anneberg Park.

In the two team's first meeting this season in Wichita, the Wildcats had little trouble with the Shockers, posting a 5-0 shutout.

Wanna take the family to the ballgame? Got 90 bucks?

ASSOCIATED PRESS

CHICAGO — Rooting for the old home team at the baseball diamond will probably put a big hole in the wallet of a family with four this summer — an average $90.87 hole, a newsletter said.

That is the cost of four game tickets, two beers, four hot dogs, four soft drinks, two souvenir baseball caps, two programs and parking, according to the Chicago-based sports-business newsletter, Team Marketing Report.

The tab — dubbed the "fan-cost index" — is 4.8 percent higher than the cost of the same items last season, an improvement from the 10.4-percent price jump the items took in 1992 compared with the previous year.

The average ticket price increased 1.7 percent this year, to $9.57, from $9.41 last year, according to the newsletter. A family of four, if paying only for tickets and nothing more, would spend $38.28.

This year's rise in ticket prices is paltry compared to last year, averaging 7.7 percent more than the year before, and with 1991, when they jumped 9 percent compared with the previous season.

"By minimizing price increases, baseball clubs are sending a message they're no longer taking fans for granted," Alan Friedman, editor of the newsletter, said.

"The attendance decreases experienced by many clubs last year suggest baseball ticket prices may have reached a breaking point for fans, at least for right now."

But ballpark food and souvenirs will cost fans an average of 12.3 percent more this year, the newsletter said.

According to a survey of the 28 major league teams, only one team — the Pittsburgh Pirates — lowered ticket prices.

Eleven teams retained last season's price, and 14 others raised prices. This is the first season for two teams — the Florida Marlins and the Colorado Rockies, both in the National League.

Raising ticket prices the most were the Atlanta Braves, up 16.2 percent to an average $9.76.

Raising prices the least were the San Diego Padres, up 1.9 percent to $8.70.

The champion Toronto Blue Jays have the highest average ticket cost at $13.73, a 6.4-percent increase. The team drew 4.03 million fans last season.

The cheapest seat in baseball is at Mile High Stadium in Denver, where the new-franchise Rockies are charging $1 for a seat in the "Rock Pile" section.

The most expensive seats in baseball cost more than 18 U.S. dollars in Toronto.

Major League Baseball spokesman Jim Small said the modest increase in the cost of attending a game shows the owners are concerned about continuing to make their product affordable.

Small, in a telephone interview from New York, said the fan-cost index does not take into consideration the myriad of discounts by various teams.

He said not every fan pays the average ticket price.

Attending a baseball game continues to be cheaper than attending either a pro basketball or football game.

An average ticket to an NBA game costs $25.16 and to an NFL game is $27.19, the newsletter said.

Outings for a family of four, with incidentals, average $158.17 each for basketball and $163.19 for football, it said.

The U.S. Labor Department says the Consumer Price Index has risen at an annual rate of 5.2 percent this year, based on figures from January and February.

Getting ready for

Open House

Matt Ralstin, senior in mechanical engineering, laughs at the amount of room left inside an Iron space shuttle the mechanical engineering department is constructing for the K-State Open House parade on Saturday. Ralstin, along with many other mechanical engineering students, was constructing the space shuttle float on Todd Wickstrum's farm. Wickstrum has been working on the float for a week.

Doug Gunter, senior in mechanical engineering, grinds the nose cone on the shuttle float.

The K-State campus will be open to the public Saturday for the University's 14th annual Open House.

Visitors will have the opportunity to meet with faculty and students from the nine colleges and take part in a wide variety of games and activities.

The Manhattan and Salina campuses will be open from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday, and the College of Technology in Salina will also be open from 1 to 4 p.m. today.

Sharon Roberts, junior in dietetics and student coordinator for Open House, said the event is expected to draw between 15,000 and 20,000 guests to the University, many of them prospective students.

Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement, said the event is popular with alumni, school groups and the general public as well.

Roberts said this is the first year that shuttle buses have been offered. The two buses will circle the campus every 20 minutes to provide transportation to visitors.

"They could really come in handy if the weather doesn't cooperate," she said.

The Open House will have a carnival-like atmosphere, allowing guests to participate in activities in addition to viewing the many displays and presentations.

Ray Hightower, assistant dean of engineering, said one of the College of Engineering's highlights will be a space-suit display.

NASA has allowed the use of two partial space suits from the Johnson Space Center in Houston, Hightower said. A suit from the current space shuttle program will be compared with a new one designed for use in a space station.

In addition, he said, engineering students will be displaying design projects in robotics.

Visitors can see how computers were used in designing the projects for NASA.

Hightower said the computer science department also has a presentation featuring robots. The robots will compete with each other in various events, including maze running and sumo wrestling.

The College of Veterinary Medicine has planned some interesting presentations as well.

"The walk-through heart is going to be exciting," said Carolyn Roberts, assistant dean of veterinary medicine, "and the petting zoo is always one of the favorites."

Visitors will have the opportunity to walk through a huge model of the heart, as well as see and touch a variety of exotic and domestic animals.

George Marble, Open House chairman for the college, said "Roamin' in the Rumen" is also sure to be a hit.

This presentation features a live cow with an opening in its stomach.

"People can stick their hand in the window and get a sample of what the cow has eaten," Marble said.

In addition to student presentations, Marble said, representatives of Kansas Specialty Dog Service of Washington, Kan., will be on hand business and administrative services for the college.

Visitors also can witness an egg-drop competition, where students are challenged to build structures to protect eggs from breaking when dropped from heights.

Potts said a K-State alumnus in landscape architecture will be sculpting 16 tons of sand into a Gothic castle for the event.

Wildcat, among others.

John Riley, assistant director of academic programs, said the Rodeo Club will also give a demonstration on roping and bull riding.
